Summary of Achievements:

- The TC of the ECCC concluded its 212 hearing days on Case 002/01 on July 23rd, 2013. The hearing on closing arguments by parties will commence on October 16th and last until October 31st.
- To speed up the trial hearing of Case 002/02, the ECCC's SCC, on July 23rd, issued its decision instructing the ECCC's Office of Administration to “explore the establishment within the TC of a second panel of national and international judges to hear and adjudicate Case 002/02.”
- On August 9th, the Royal Government of New Zealand pledged financing the ECCC in the amount of 200,000 NZD. On August 21st, the EU announced its further financial support for ECCC’s international component in the amount of 3 million euros.
- On September 16th, International Co-Prosecutor Andrew Cayley resigned from his prosecutorial post at the ECCC.
- On September 18th, the spokesperson for UNAKRT announced that “The United Nations has successfully worked with a group of major donors to secure their authorization to make a further loan to the national component of the ECCC for the payment of arrears of national salaries.”
- The Legal Response Team received one request from the Cambodian OCP for supplying immediately two mug-shot photos of S-21 victims along with biographies to be used for cross examination of witness Ek Hen\(^1\) testifying before the TC. The team also received several requests from OCIJ and a defense lawyer. In total, the team provided documents of 4,022 pages and 19 photos of interviewees to OCIJ and the defense counsels.
- The Victims Participation Project Team added two more student volunteers to work on the translation of victim participation forms and another five volunteers to work on the transcription of KR survivor story interviews. They achieved the translation of 41 victim information forms, 56 survivor stories, transcription of 11 interviews and the conclusion of MOU with VSS regarding victim reparations in Case 002.
- The Fair Trial Team produced two more volumes of the Fair Trial Observation booklet and conducted further three outreach activities at three universities in three provinces. A total of 400 Fair Trial Observation booklets were distributed.
- The Cambodia Law and Policy Journal under the WITNESSING JUSTICE Project received several articles contributing to the publication and conducted 24 hours of legal education to 65 law students and junior lawyers for English Legal Writing and Introduction to Contracts.
- Cataloguing and Database Management made considerable progress by entering 6,930 records; filling 1,208 worksheets; editing 1,095 records; scanning 4,937 records; and listing 1,776 records. Furthermore, 191 letters of appeal for document donations were sent to 191 country representatives to the United Nations. In addition, 41 new photos were collected this quarter.
- The KR History Classroom at Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum provided DK historical classes for 36 days to 647 local and international visitors.
- The Promoting Accountability Team successfully made 3 field trips to Sampov Loun, Phnom Proek, Samlaut Districts of Battambang Province, and Veal Veng District of Pursat, Banteay Meancheay, and Udar Meancheay Provinces, conducted 8 interviews, summarized 365 interviews, translated 164 interview summaries into English, and digitized 180 tapes of interview.

\(^1\) Ms. Ek Hen was interviewed in Kampong Cham Province by DC-Cam’s Promoting Accountability Team in 2003. Her interview transcript made by the team was used during the trial hearing was well.

- The Genocide Education team received one refresh session on teaching DK history from Dr. Phala Chea, co-author of the Teacher’s Guidebook, and carried out three commune teacher trainings in Takeo, Kampong Cham and Kampong Thom Provinces with 300 participants, equal to 2,100 person days.
- One ECCC visit by villagers under Witnessing Justice took place with 25 participants from Kampong Thom, Stung Treng and Koh Kong Provinces. Another three Public Village Forums were held in Kampong Chhnang, Kampong Thom, and Battambang Provinces with the participation of 235 students, children, villagers and former KR members.
- Cham Muslim Oral History moved a big step forward by achieving funding from Air Asia Foundation for the Cham Identity Project as a Social Enterprise for the period from July 2013 to June 2014.
- The Public Information Room serves as a home for the public to access information held in DC-Cam’s archives. This quarter PIR received 230 esteemed guests. Materials distributed free of charge include 143 monthly Searching for the Truth magazines, 96 copies of DK history textbook, 72 copies of Genocide: The Importance of Case 002 booklet, and 85 copies of KRT observation booklet.
- This quarter DC-Cam screened A River Changes Course (Kbang Tik Tonle in Khmer) to 519 people. The audiences include villagers, students, garment workers, NGO members, academics, ambassadors, Khmer Americans, Thais, Burmese, etc.
- The aim of producing a Book of Memory remains a long way to go. During this quarter DC-Cam is still under the process of collecting names from DC-Cam documents and crosschecking to avoid repetition and finding out whether there are links between those names. For this quarter, 258 worksheets were input into the computer system.
- Website development made further progress this quarter. DC-Cam’s website received 11,228 visitors.
- The Cambodia Tribunal Monitor project made great achievements including 15 daily reports posted on the blog, 13 hearing days observed, 118 trial footages captured, and three outreach workshops conducted during this quarter.
- New publications were not possible for this quarter. However, one new book reached the final stage of technical editing and final editing was completed for one book translation.
- Research for a book on community education and industry in Anlong Veng continued.
- The translation of The Killing of Cambodia: Geography, Genocide and the Unmaking of Space from English to Khmer language was completed in this quarter. It is 320 pages long.
- DC-Cam produced and published 9,000 copies of three monthly Khmer issues of Searching for the Truth (issues 163, 164 and 165) and each issue was distributed to all 23 provincial halls and municipality hall, 176 district offices, 1,537 commune offices, 33 government offices, 28 embassies, the National Assembly, the Senate, 3 political parties, 18 universities and libraries, the ECCC, researchers, villagers, students and individual visitors to DC-Cam’s premises.
- Voices of Genocide: Episodes 5, 6 and 7 of Justice and the KR Famine were broadcasted on four radio stations in Battambang, Kampot, and Preah Vihear Provinces and Phnom Penh. Two field trip studies were conducted in Kampot and Takeo Provinces.
- DC-Cam helped three researchers in their research at DC-Cam’s archives.
- DC-Cam participated in three international conferences in Burma and Thailand.
- DC-Cam received two Burmese human rights activists on a one-month internship at DC-Cam, one associate fellow from University of Malaya Centre for Democracy and Election and a group of 8 students and 2 faculty members from University Center for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities and University of Washington.
- Two DC-Cam staff embarked on further studies in the United States of America and another one graduated with an MA from Chulalongkorn University in Thailand.
- Two DC-Cam staff attended an international training on democracy development.
- There were 16 local and international instances of media coverage of DC-Cam’s work. One TV network, CTN-CNC, hosted a show on the issue of the 28 July election during which one DC-Cam staff was invited to speak.

LABOR OF DEMOCRACY AND HUMAN RIGHTS

The Tragedy of Mao Sok Chan’s Death

During recent protests in Phnom Penh, another Cambodian has died while demanding improvements to democracy and human rights in Cambodia. The victim, Mao Sok Chan, was just one of many people who took to the streets to voice their frustration with the results of the recent election. Mao Sok Chan was married and is survived by four children, who will now grow up without their father.

It is tempting to discount the tragedy of Mao Sok Chan’s death in light of his country’s bitter history of human rights abuses and mass killings over the past half-century; however, it is important that past abuses are not allowed to excuse current and future acts of violence and violations of the basic principle of individual human rights and dignity. Mao Sok Chan, his family and all Cambodians deserve to see justice done for this inexcusable act of violence. Just because millions of people who killed others during the KR period or Cambodia’s civil wars escaped prosecution, does not mean that the parties responsible for Mao Sok Chan’s death should enjoy impunity for their actions.

Although it is doubtful that Mao Sok Chan himself set out to be a martyr for the cause of democracy in his country, his life has nonetheless been taken from him while he was protesting to demand a better future that he will not live to see. Democracy and human rights are causes that, despite their noble aspirations, have sadly required many lives to be sacrificed in Cambodia and elsewhere before being realized. Now, for the first time in its turbulent history, Cambodia is finally installing its own democratic foundations through the efforts and sacrifices of Mao Sok Chan and other Cambodians like him, who have stood up and demanded that their nation do better. While the ultimate goal of establishing a truly democratic nation that fundamentally respects human rights may remain out of reach for the time being, we should not forget Mao Sok Chan who died for us, now or in the future when the ideals he died for are finally attained.

Summary Interview with Mao Sok Chan’s Parents

LIM CHEYTOATH
Mr. Mao Moang, 52, and Mrs. Tith Sang, 57, are Mao Sok Chan's parents. They have six children and are living in Ta Long village, Sangkat Chak Angre Kroam, Khan Meanchey, Phnom Penh.

Sitting in front of a small house and welcoming guests under a makeshift ceremonial hall, Mao Moang described that prior to the KR regime he lived in Russey Keo District in Phnom Penh. After the KR took over Phnom Penh, he was evacuated to Doung Commune, Baty District, Ta Keo Province. There, he was ordered to dig holes to make fertilizer in the Children’s Unit before he was sent to plough the paddy fields and raise dams in the mobile unit. He worked at the place until the KR regime collapsed. After 7 January 1979, Mao Moang returned to Phnom Penh to seek the spoils of war and sold them to the Vietnamese troops at Chak Angre. Those spoils were sent to Vietnam by boat along the river.

Tith Sang, who was sitting nearby, also mentioned that prior to the KR regime her family lived in Kampong Cham Province. In early 1970s, however, she was evacuated by the KR soldiers to Kampong Thom Province and was forced to work at a worksite known as the First January Dam. She lived and worked there until the end of the regime. Soon after the collapse of the regime, she returned to her homeland in Kampong Cham.

In early 1980s, Mao Moang and Tith Sang married in Kampong Cham Province, before moving to Phnom Penh in the same year. The marriage gave the couple six children, the oldest child, now age 32 and their second child, Mao Sok Chan, 30. However, Sok Chan died during a police crackdown near the Kbal Tnal Sky Bridge on 15 Sept 2013.

1. The ECCC: Activities and Events

A. Chronological Summary about Activities of the ECCC

The ECCC concluded its hearing on 23 July 2013, ending 212 hearing days in total for Case 002/01. Throughout these hearing days there were three expert witnesses, 52 fact witnesses, fivew character witnesses and 32 Civil Parties providing testimony on the charge of crimes against humanity in Case 002/01 against current accused persons, Nuon Chea and Khieu Samphan, which focused on “the forced movement of the population from Phnom Penh in April 1975 and later from other regions (phases one and two), and the alleged execution of Khmer Republic soldiers at Toul Po Chrey in Pursat Province.”

While there has been speculation on how many mini-trials will be conducted by the TC after its conclusion of Case 002/01, on 23 July 2013 the ECCC’s SCC held that the trial hearing of Case 002/02 “shall commence as soon as possible” with a minimum charge related to “S-21, a worksite, a cooperative, and genocide”. The SCC further instructed the Office of Administration to “explore the establishment within the TC of a second panel of national and international judges to hear and adjudicate Case 002/02.”

The ECCC’s budget seemed likely to sustain due to the pledge made by the Royal Government of New Zealand on 9 August 2013. The pledge in the amount of NZD 200,000 was made for the support of the national side of the Court. On 21 August, The EU ambassador to Cambodia Jean-Francois Cautain announced that the European Union will provide another contribution of 3 million Euros (USD 4 million) to the international component of the KR Tribunal.

The UN and Cambodian Government Share the Obligation to Fund Justice

Press release by Youk Chhang, Director of the Documentation Center of Cambodia, September 6, 2013

After many years of awaiting the trials of senior KR leaders, Cambodian survivors are now watching as their hopes of justice slip away. Repeated funding crises and political impasses between the United Nations and the Cambodian Government have led to trials that took too long to begin and have taken too long to complete.

The latest crisis involves another strike by unpaid Cambodian staffers. UN officials point to Cambodia's obligation to finance most of its side of the court. Cambodian officials reply that they require donor support to meet those obligations. In the meantime, the tribunal's work stalls again, frustrating the legitimate expectations that millions of victims invested in the process.

While both the United Nations and Cambodian government have been keen to emphasize one another's obligations, they would do well to recall that they committed jointly to pursue the interest of justice for victims of the KR era. Both sides must contribute to overcome the current impasse and see Case 002 to fruition.

If the tribunal fails due to funding shortfalls, most Cambodian observers will hold both the United Nations and Cambodian government responsible. If the tribunal comes to a strong conclusion, most Cambodians will give both sides credit. Signs of renewed commitment by both sides will help restore public confidence in an ailing process, which will generate momentum for further contributions by both the national authorities and foreign donors. Both UN and Cambodian leaders owe it to the Cambodian people not to miss that opportunity.

On September 16th, Andrew Cayley, an International Co-Prosecutor at the ECCC resigned due to personal family matters in the United Kingdom. His resignation happened in the midst of the financial and administrative crisis at this Court.

On September 18th, Spokesperson for UNAKRT announced that “The United Nations has successfully worked with a group of major donors to secure their authorization to make a further loan to the national component of the ECCC for the payment of arrears of national salaries.” See comment in Appendix K.

B. Legal Response

The Response Team received one urgent request from the Cambodian OCP and supplied two mug-shot photos of S-21 victims along with biographies upon the Office’s request for them to be used for cross examination of witness testimony by Ek Hen\(^6\) before the TC in the first week of July of this year.

During this quarter, DC-Cam’s Legal Response Team received a new Rogatory Letter from International Co-Investigating Judge Mark B. Harmon (US Judge) which extended the effect of the Letter up until December 2013. The mission derived from the letter is, among other things, to “identify, examine, copy and/or seize any document (including audio-visual material) from the Documentation Center of Cambodia (DC-Cam), conducive to establishing the truth with respect to the facts under investigation” for Cases 003 and 004.

Under this power, the investigators requested on August 14th to extend the scope of the course of reading DC-Cam’s PA interview transcripts to Svay Rieng and Prey Veng Provinces. In total 153 interviewed transcripts were to be reviewed. After their completion of the review, OCIJ made a request to scan 16 interview transcripts useful to their continued investigation over Case 003 and 004. The Response Team completed the scan and gave 484 pages and 17 photos to OCIJ.

On August 23rd, OCIJ made a request to review 280 KR documents they discovered on DC-Cam’s website. These documents were verified as not-yet-requested by the ECCC. After finishing the review of 280 KR documents, they made a further request to review another 442 KR documents at DC-Cam.

The Response Team also provided upon request for documents equal to 32 pages in English and 311 in Khmer to a defense lawyer for a named suspect at the ECCC.

In September the Response Team continued to provide documents to OCIJ and defense counsels upon their requests.

The OCIJ requested to send a team of investigators to review documents and to scan some documents that they had already reviewed. According to the record, there were 308 documents scanned equal to 3,060 pages.

Nuon Chea’s defense counsel requested to come to DC-Cam to do their own research and review some documents. After their review, two documents were requested for scanning which is equal to 135 pages and 2 photos.

\(^6\) Ms. Ek Hen was interviewed in Kampong Cham Province by DC-Cam’s Promoting Accountability Team in 2003. Her interview transcript made by the team was also used during the trial hearing was well.
On September 24th, defense lawyers (Mr. Ang Udom and Michael G. Karnavas with a case manager and an assistant) for a suspect in Case 003 came to DC-Cam to meet Dara Vanthan and discussed certain issues concerning documents relevant to their client (a suspect in Case 003). The meeting took place for thirty minutes discussing research for documents through DC-Cam’s databases online.

This quarter, Mr. Christopher Dearing supervised ten legal associates (law students) and four associates from various US and foreign institutions. The law students accomplished a wide range of activities encompassing the following:

- Attended six ECCC public education and/or genocide education forums, including Army genocide education training;
- Two legal associates facilitated legal writing classes by conducting client-based interviewing scenarios with Cambodian law students and lawyers;
- Six legal associates edited articles for the Cambodia Law and Policy Journal;
- Two legal associates conducted research on victim and civil party testimonies before the ECCC for the purpose of informing DC-Cam’s creation of genocide education materials and permanent exhibit, which are being proposed as judicial reparations in Case 002;
- One legal associate advised senior Cambodian government officials on the drafting of model legislation to address private collections of cultural property in Cambodia. The associate researched over a dozen countries’ legal and regulatory approaches to protecting and managing cultural property for the purpose of advising the National Museum of Cambodia on legal courses of action in protecting and managing private collections of cultural property. The legal associate produced a legal memorandum encompassing her foreign and international legal research, as well as a draft licensing form, and suggestions on proposed legislation.
- Three legal associates conducted research on the rule of law in Cambodia. One associate interviewed a dozen judges on their understanding of Cambodia’s problems with rule of law; a second associate completed his research on the Internal Rules; and a third associate completed her memorandum on the ECCC’s approach to judicial reparations in the context of international precedence (i.e., the ICC).

C. Victim Participation

VPA continued to work with both the VSS and the LCL on implementing the reparation projects and non-judicial measures. These projects include:

- A permanent exhibition on forced transfer;
- An additional chapter on forced transfer in the Teacher’s Guidebook: Teaching the History of Democratic Kampuchea (1975-1979) (to include the Tuol Po Chrey killing site) and distribution of DC-Cam’s textbook A History of Democratic Kampuchea (1975-1979).

According to VSS, there was a pledge of funding of 80,000 Euros for part of DC-Cam’s permanent exhibition on forced transfer. In August, DC-Cam submitted the project description and budget details to VSS for this funding. DC-Cam was also preparing necessary documents on reparations and non-judicial measures for the LCL’s final submission which will take place on 26 September 2013. These necessary documents include descriptions of the above projects, organization documents, and secured funding.
Advocate San Frontier (ASF) agreed to transfer its client archive, which contains complaint and civil party documents and other relevant documents, to DC-Cam. DC-Cam has already inspected the contents of the archive and agreed to protect the archive. ASF will transfer this archive to DC-Cam in November 2013, after the ECCC’s final submission.

The progress on VPA work continues at a speedy pace given the fact that two more staff were assigned to work on translating victim information forms and survivor stories. The two are Kimsroy Sokvisal, full time staff recently graduated LL.M. from Hong Kong University, and Vannavuth Sochanmalisphuong, part time volunteer.

For this quarter the VPA team made a considerable achievement in translating into English 41 victim information forms and 56 survivor stories. To assist the transcription of 574 interviews, DC-Cam employed five part-time volunteers under the supervision of Mr. Kimsroy. Since the transcription work started in September, there have been 11 done.

D. Fair Trial

The Fair Trial Project seeks to provide legal outreach material in Khmer language to students and the public. It also fosters a culture of legal scholarship among Cambodian law students, and monitors and confidentially reports on issues of legal concern at the ECCC to ensure strict adherence to international standards.

Fair Trial Observation Booklet

This quarter the Fair Trial Observation team worked on two other volumes of the booklet, Issues 22 and 23. Issue 22 covered the ECCC’s hearings from May 21st to June 10th concerning forced transfer of the population in the first and second phases and the killing of former soldiers of the Lon Nol regime (Khmer Republic Regime), under the charge of crimes against humanity. During the hearings, there was one fact witness, four character witnesses and one psychological expert coming to give their testimonies before the TC. The rest of witnesses were 16 civil parties.

Notably, Nuon Chea broke his right to silence at this point in time by making a statement concerning the issue of forced transfer of the population in Phnom Penh on 17 April 1975. Nuon Chea allegedly tried to shield his crimes by saying that the transfer was an idea of the CPK in response to two reasons, possible American bombardment and Vietnamese invasion. Nuon Chea said “Democratic Kampuchea did not decide to evacuate people out of Phnom Penh city in vain, but with absolute responsibility”.

7 Observation of KR Tribunal, Issue 22, p. 74-75
Issue 23 focused on the continuation of the substantive hearing on forced transfer of the population in the first and second phases and the killing of former soldiers of Lon Nol regime (Khmer Republic Regime) for Case 002/01. However, it was different in the number and qualification of the witnesses. In addition, during the course of the hearing, the parties took turns to present their document submission before the TC Judges. The witnesses covered in this issue were 1) Lav Lam, a former KR soldier; 2) Nou Mao, a former KR member of a commune in Region 21; 3) Pich Chim, a former district secretary (chief); 4) Leng Chheung, former driver of Khieu Samphan; and 5) Ek Hen, former KR cadre under the control of Office 870 or M (’mo’ in Khmer) 870.

The booklets are now available in various school and university libraries, the National Assembly and Senate, and at the grassroots level, through the PIR, university forums, village forums, and commune teacher trainings. This quarter the Fair Trial Team distributed 400 copies of the observation booklets. The booklets are also available at: http://www.d.dccam.org/Projects/ECCC_Trial_Observation/ECCC_Trial_Observation_Booklet.htm.

Observing Trial Proceedings
The team of four Cambodian law-trained staff continued to observe trial hearings at the ECCC on a daily basis. The team observed hearings on:

- Witness testimonies: (1) Sum Alatt, a former Lon Nol’s soldier in Pursat Province; (2) Pich chim, a former district secretary (chief) of 105 (Tramkak District of Takeo Province); (3) Lev Lam, former KR soldier; (4) Ek Hen, a former KR cadre; (5) Stephen Heder, a scholar on KR history.

8 Region 21 during the KR covered 8 districts including Chhlong (now in Kratie Province), Peam Chyleang (now became a commune in Thbaung Khmum District of Kampong Cham Province), Memot, Kroch Chhmar, Thbaung Khmum, Tamber, and other two new districts Toek Chrov and Tromoung (named by the KR).
Hearing on Documents: Placing documents by co-prosecutor and the response from the defence team on the role of accused person, evacuation phase 1 and 2, and killing of Lon Nol soldiers at Tuol Po Chrey crime site. The hearing is in recess until October 9, 2013.

Presentation at Universities

On July 12, for CTM’s outreach activity, Chan Pronh, one of the Fair Trial Project members, presented on the rights to legal representation and current development of the ECCC’s trial proceedings to over one hundred students from Build Bright University in Phnom Penh, following with a Q&A session. Popular questions raised during the session included:
- Would there be Cases 003 and 004 in the future?
- Was the truth revealed before Ieng Thirith was released and Ieng Sary had died?
- Since everyone knows that KR leaders committed crimes why did the ECCC spend so much money and time on the trial?
- What are the advantages and disadvantages of the ECCC?
- Did Pol Pot force his fellows to commit genocide?
- Why did the KR starve and torture people?
- How did the KR regime collapse?
- While Pol Pot wanted to eliminate all classes during the KR reign of terror there were two kinds of class—new people and base (old) people, why?

On August 15th, Ms. Dy Socheata led CTM’s outreach activity at Kampot Institute of Polytechnic in Kampot Province. In front of about a hundred students there, Ms. Dy presented on the current development of the trial proceedings at the ECCC, following with a question-and-answer session. Among other questions, students asked:
- How many more documents are needed for Case 002?
- How many zones were there during the KR?
- Which zone had the highest fatality rate?
- Will Ieng Thirith be tried since she was found mentally ill?
- Why does it take so long for ECCC to try the cases?
- Why did the government ask for assistance from the international community to try the KR leaders?
- Will there be a Cases 003 and 004?

On September 5th, Mr. Lim Cheytoath led CTM’s outreach activity at Bright Hope Institute Kampong Chhnang Province. In front of about a hundred students there, Mr. Lim presented on the current development of the trial proceedings at the ECCC following with a Q & A session at the end of his presentation. Among other questions, students asked:
1. What were the benefits of the KR regime?
2. Who were the KR leaders besides Pol Pot?
3. What are the benefits of the KR Tribunal?
4. What is S-21?
5. Why did the ECCC separate Case 002 into mini-trials?
6. Who are the accused in Cases 003 and 004?
7. When was the ECCC created and for what purpose?
8. Why did the ECCC face financial problems? What is the solution?
9. If all the accused died, would justice be achieved?

Dissemination of Information

To ease understanding and provide updates on issues arising at the ECCC’s daily hearing, the Fair Trial Project team members wrote short articles on popular topics including:

1. Victim Reactions to Nuon Chea’s and Khieu Samphan’s Responses on Evacuation and Right to Remain Silence
2. TC Warns the Khieu Samphan Defense Team
3. Request to Warn the Khieu Samphan Defense Team
4. Khieu Samphan to Remain in Detention Even If Found Not Guilty in Case 002/01
5. Reaction of People to the Issue of Evacuation

These articles above were published in the local Reasmei Kampuchea newspaper and the Searching for the Truth monthly magazine.

Assisting Legal Associates

Chhunly Chhay and Cheytoath Lim, Fair Trial Project staff, helped Katherine Culver, a legal associate from Yale Law School, in interviewing judges at Kandal provincial and Phnom Penh municipal courts.

E. Witnessing Justice: The Cambodia Law and Policy Journal (CLPJ)

As part of its ongoing Witnessing Justice Project, DC-Cam launched activities in preparation for the publication of the CLPJ as well as activities to promote legal scholarship in Cambodia. The mission of the CLPJ is to promote critical legal scholarship on issues pending before the ECCC as well as other urgent legal, social, and development issues facing Cambodia and the Southeast Asian region.

By this quarter, CLPJ team received nine scholarly submissions acceptable to print. They are:

- Acid Violence in Cambodia: Achieving Justice for Survivors
- Catch a Naga by the Tail: The Hidden Risks for Stability for Western Investors in Cambodia
- The Effect, Applicability, Interpretation, and Enforcement of International Law in Cambodia
- Avenues to Improving Workers Rights and Labor Standards Compliance in a Global Economy
- Enacting Denial Laws and the Freedom of Expression in International Law
- Making Reparations “Effective”: Challenges Facing Civil Parties in Case 002
- Internal Rules in the ECCC: The Good, the Bad, and the Future Legacy
Preserving Cultural Heritage as a Form of Reconciliation

All above articles are under a substantive edit.

Beside the CLPJ, Mr. Dearing provided 24 hours of legal education to 30 law students and junior lawyers for English Legal Writing and Introduction to Contracts. He further developed two legal education courses including a) Land Lease Agreement—Client consultation Exercise, and b) Client Consultation—Drafting an Email and Responding to Client Questions. Outside DC-Cam’s campus, Mr. Dearing and Terith Chy provided one legal education training to 35 law students at Cambodian University for Specialty (CUS). The training covered analysis of contract and law, and drafting legal memos.

2. Documentation

A. Cataloging and Database Management

Cataloging and database management is a long-term and tedious project which significantly contributes to many aspects of the justice, memory and healing process, to close the darkest period of KR terror for victims and Cambodian people in order to move forward with strength and hope. To achieve this invaluable objective, staff members in the project are committed to working step by step including filling information on worksheets, entering data from worksheets into computer, translating data on worksheets into English and vice versa, entering English translated data on worksheets into computer, compiling listings of documents, digitizing hard copies of documents and so on.

The table below shows the progress of team’s work in addition to achievements made in the last quarter.

An example of the substantial impact of documentation is reflected in OCIJ’s request to DC-Cam on 23 August 2013: “I am forwarding you a list of documents (280 documents in total) which we discovered in the DC-Cam website (http://www.d.dccam.org/Database/Lod/index.php). We can confirm that the court has not received these documents and would therefore appreciate if you could facilitate the OCIJ analysts to review them.” See more in B. Legal Response Team

Continuing from last quarter, DC-Cam took one more step forward in expanding the scope of appealing for documentation donations by sending 191 letters to appeal for donation of archives relating to the KR and UNTAC periods to 191 country representatives to the United Nations based in New York. The sample of the letter is shown below.

After the letters of appeal were sent out, DC-Cam received the response from Second Secretary of Permanent Mission of the Republic of Armenia to the United Nations, seeking to promote cooperation and exchange between DC-Cam and the Armenia Genocide Museum and Institute (AGMI). Georgia also responded. See Appendix L

This quarter, DC-Cam collected 41 new photos of the children of KR victims and former KR cadres, including the rare photo of one suspect of Case 004. Among 41 photos, 38 were collected through PA field trips and three donated by the son of Poch Yuonly.

B. KR History Classroom at Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum

This is the continuation of a routine activity of DC-Cam regarding outreach to Cambodians and foreign visitors to Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum, through its KR History Classroom, which was established by turning a former interrogation room into a history classroom. For each session, one DC-Cam’s staff is assigned to lead the classroom by usually providing a video footage of S-21 as an introduction, followed by a presentation on various topics concerning KR regime. A Q&A session follows. The class is held on Mondays and Fridays at 2:00 P.M. and Wednesdays at 9:00 A.M.

Below is one sample report on the History Classroom:

The Tuol Sleng History Classroom today was attended by 20 tourists from America and Europe. Today at TSL there were many villagers coming to visit under the invitation from the ECCC. I showed the video footage about how S-21 was made, who had taken the footage and how videographers found the prison. I also discussed about the discovery of seven children at the prison when Vietnamese armies arrived and liberated S-21. These children were hiding under a pile of clothes behind the prison. I also compared S-21 with other prisons around the country and used S-21 as an example of more than 196 KR prisons and accompanying killing sites under Democratic Kampuchea. Most of the killing sites existed around Tonle Sap Lake and in the central plain of Cambodia where many agricultural activities took place under DK which intended to turn Cambodia into an agricultural utopia. Many people were evacuated to the countryside to work in the rice fields and unfortunately this is where they died in large numbers. Other areas in the country such as the northeast and southwest have fewer deaths as there are few mass grave sites discovered.

One participant asked why the KR killed so many people and for what purpose. My lecture provided him with half the answer which was to turn Cambodia into an agricultural utopia and ideologically pure nation following communism. The KR also lacked trust among their ranks and files and killed both ordinary people and their members.

The table below shows approximate numbers of visitors who attended KR History Classroom, composition of visitors and possible occupation of visitors.

Selected comments from class participants:

Genocide is a terrible and unforgivable activity. I feel terrible sorry for all those innocent people. We all need to remember the history, recognize the mistakes of the past. This tragedy happened in many countries I have to say the Nanjing genocide which was done by the Japanese was 10 times worse. I think they need to remember this rather than deny the truth, because, their attitude towards this will make it happen again. (YiYi, China)

It was such a dark time for Cambodian people. Walking around, reading and seeing photos, I feel so painful for the people. They were innocent, harmless people, including children, and that is the most terrible part. Human race should not suffer from anything like this again. (Minh Pham, Vietnam)

This genocide is one of the worst. But why did the trials take so long to start? We knew they were guilty. It’s sad to see the faces of the victims. It makes everything so real. (Audrey Hunger, Canada)

Thank you for inviting us to learn about intimate details of Cambodia’s recent past. I am heart-broken for the families who lost everything and for Cambodia as a whole. Thank you for being so willing to share. I have a lot of respect for those who lost everything and still managed to raise up Cambodia through the loss. (Shayna, USA)

Thank you for the class and lecture. It was very helpful being able to ask any questions about the KR. (Marer, Germany)

It is very important that you keep telling about horrible past to avoid anything to happen again. Thank you for your time of valuable information. I like your present country very much. (Suen Eugen Hamsen, Denmark)

Thank you, a very informative and important talk. I had no idea how terrible the rule of Pol Pot was. (Andy Paulmer, England)

The questions below were raised during the classroom:

1. Why did it take so long for S-21 to be known?
2. Does Cambodia really have a law on genocide denial?
3. Why did so many Cambodian people support the KR revolution?
4. Why did the West support the KR after their fall in 1979?
5. How many victims were there at S-21?
6. When did we call the S-21 prison Tuol Sleng?
7. How many people survived from Tuol Sleng after the fall of KR regime?
8. Where is Cheung EK?
9. How can I receive the "Searching for the truth" magazine?
10. Why were majority of prisoners KR cadres themselves?
11. For how long did Duch serve his prison term?
12. Why didn't people shoot the KR when they were forced to leave home?
13. Why did the King ask people to run into the jungle?
14. Is Duch still alive?
15. Was the King a powerful person in his reign?
17. How did the KR take power?
18. Was Pol Pot successful in his studies?
19. Did the KR deliver the corpses to Cheung EK?
20. During the KR regime, did the King stay in Cambodia?
21. Why did Vietnam invade Cambodia?
22. Did Vietnam know that the KR was committing genocide against their people?
23. What were the foreign embassies in Phnom Penh?
24. Did the international community know about the KR atrocities at the time?
25. Why did it take so long to prosecute former KR leaders?
26. How did Sihanouk fall from power?
27. Why did Vietnam and the KR fight each other as they were both communist countries?
28. Why was the KR recognized by the international community during and after the killings?
29. How big were the KR forces at the beginning?
30. Does DC-Cam provide tours to young students from 6 to 15 years old to Tuol Sleng?
31. Does the government provide tours to young children to visit the Tuol Sleng?
32. Were there KR classes in the past?
33. Are there former KR working in current government?
34. Did the international community know about the killing inside Cambodia?
35. Why were the mass graves located at their locations in the Killing Fields Map?
36. Did Vietnam know about the killing?
37. How did Vietnam discover Tuol Sleng prison?

C. Promoting Accountability (PA)

Since the project’s establishment in 2000, the Promoting Accountability (PA) Project has played a pivotal role in fact-finding in an effort to promote justice and a better historical understanding of the DK regime. Thousands of lower and middle KR cadres and their family members were interviewed for this aim. During this quarter the PA team continued their assignment to build a comprehensive database.

PA Database
In addition to 160 interview summaries entered into the database last quarter, the PA team made further progress of 365 interview summaries from Kampong Cham Province. The Team has succeeded in making 164 interview summaries and translating them into English.

Transcription

For the last quarter the PA team has achieved the completion of digitizing PA interview audio tapes. This quarter, they continued to digitize VOT interview audio tapes into MP3 format file. There were 336 tapes done. The team also transcribed nine key interviews, making up a total of 416 pages.

Field Trip

From August 12-14, Dany Long and Vannak Sok traveled to Sampov Loun and Phnom Proek Districts of Battambang Province as part of the field trip investigation. The purpose of the trip was to follow and interview three former KR cadres at the level of district chief in former Region 5. The three cadres were not to be investigated on crimes charged in Case 003 and 004 by ECCC. As a result, the team could achieve their mission.

From August 16-19, Dany Long and Vannak Sok traveled to Samlaut District, Battambang Province where The team interviewed two KR members. The team extended the field trip to follow up on one case in Veal Veng District of Pursat Province.

From August 27-31, Dany Long and Vannak Sok traveled to Takeo, Banteay Meanchey, Siem Reap, Preah Vihear, and Odar Meanchey Provinces in order to follow up with five KR figures. Unfortunately, the team could only complete one case. Three others died many years ago and one could not speak due to severe illness.

Example of PA Interview Summaries

Ros Phat, A KR Cadre

By Dany Long

On August 12, 2013, Sok Vannak and I visited Phnom Proek District, Battambang Province. There we searched for Ros Phat, who was a former chief of Serey Sophoan District, Region 5, Northwest Zone. Unfortunately, Ros Phat died because of disease just three months ago (May 12, 2013). However, we found a photo of Ros Phat (attached) with his first wife and his daughter hang up in the wall of his house.

The photo reminded me that the KR cadres also are human being. They have their husbands/or wives. They have their own children. They have... fathers and mothers. They have their sisters, brothers, and relatives. They love each other. Even so, they were brutal to others. They forced people to overwork in rice fields. They forced the separation of other family members. They did not offer enough food to people. They tortured people. They killed people by accusing people as enemies of their revolution.

Ros Phat’s second wife (photo attached), Pronh Tum, 54 years old and lives in Phnom Proek District, Battambang Province. Tum was also a messenger of Ros Phat’s first wife. She told us that the photo was taken in 1977 by a Chinese delegation who came to visit Region 5, Northwest Zone. At that time, the delegation took several photos of Ros Phat and his family members. However, the photos were lost after then, and Ros Phat just kept only the one photo. Tum added that the man in right hand side of the photo was Ros Phat, who died three months ago. A woman with a baby in left hand side was Ros Phat’s first wife’s name is Phal and his little daughter, Mom. Phal and her daughter died because of malaria in late 1979, when Phat and his family fled to Cambodia - Thailand border after the Vietnamese entered Cambodia in 1979. Phat married to his second wife, Pronh Tum in Thailand territory in 1980. Phat and his second wife have three daughters and four sons.

Phat was born in Angchaut village, Samlanh Commune, Angkor Chey District, Kampot Province. Phat volunteered to join the KR revolution soon after coups d’état in 1970. Phat served as a soldier in Takeo Province. Phat broke his eye when his unit fired against Lon Lol soldiers in Takeo battle field in 1974. After the KR came to power in April, 1975, Phat was in a disabled unit of the Southwest Zone. Phat married to Phal in 1976. In 1977, Phat and his wife were sent to Northwest Zone by Ta Mok (Ta 15), who was chief of Southwest Zone. There, Phat was appointed to be a chief of Serey Sophoan District, Region 5, Northwest Zone. Phat’s first wife, Phal became a chief of Toek Thla Commune, Serey Sophoan District.

3. Public Education and Outreach

A. Genocide Education

DC-Cam’s Genocide Education Project seeks to promote education on the history of Democratic Kampuchea, genocide and its effects, to Cambodian students. Through the art of teaching and learning it is believed that reconciliation, justice and democracy will be achieved at the end. So far DC-Cam, in collaboration with the Cambodian Ministry of Education, Youth and Sports, has trained over 3,000 history teachers on how to teach KR history in an effective and objective manner.

During this quarter, DC-Cam invited Dr. Phala Chea, Khmer-American author of Teacher’s Guidebook: The Teaching of “A History of Democratic Kampuchea (1975-1979)”, to DC-Cam as a consultant. Dr. Chea provided an additional refresh session to all national trainers including DC-Cam staff, who are qualified to train teachers, before the next training sessions commence.

The Commune Teacher Training was held on August 17-22 at Provincial Pedagogical Training Center of Takeo. Fifty teachers (16 female) from Takeo and another fifty (10 female) from Kampot Provinces attended the training. This training involved six national trainers (four from the Ministry of Education, Youth and Sports and another two from DC-Cam) and four municipal and provincial trainers (two from Phnom Penh and another two from Kandal.
The active participation of all 100 commune teachers from 55 different high and junior schools was encouraged by the honorary presence of Ministerial Under-Secretary of State in charge of genocide education nationwide and the governor of the provincial Office of Education, Youth and Sports during the opening ceremony of the training. The training also involved Psychiatrist, MD, and Neurologist Dr. Sunbaunat KA to deal with possible issues of mental problems that may arise during the training, after the training, or during the period of teaching in the future at their home schools. The training was conducted full-time for six days by using two primary materials, A History of Democratic Kampuchea (1975-1979) textbooks and Teacher’s Guidebook: The Teaching of A History of Democratic Kampuchea (1975-1979). With regard to the technical mechanism of the training, in the morning session, it dealt with a lecture on DK history (half of the morning session) which ran through 12 chapters of the textbook for the whole training and teaching methodologies in teacher’s guidebook for the rest of time. In the afternoon session, the training focused on teaching practices sampled by participant teachers.

The training ended up with the evaluation filled by all participant teachers. Below is a sample of the evaluation after the completion of the training.

DC-Cam Fourth Quarterly Report 2013
In September, there were two more commune teacher trainings which took place in Kampong Cham and Kampong Thom Provinces.

On 7-12 September 2013, the Genocide Education team traveled to Kampong Cham Province to conduct the 10th commune teacher training. There were 93 commune teachers who participated in the training which made a composition of 47 (19 females) from fifty schools respectively within Kampong Cham Province and another 46 (18 females) from 29 schools within Kratie Province. The training took place at the Kampong Cham Regional Center for Pedagogy. This training adopted all materials, methods and activities of the previous training.

On 23-28 September 2013, the Genocide Education team traveled to Kampong Thom Province to conduct the 11th commune teacher training. There were 100 commune teachers who participated in the training which made a composition of 50 (19 females) from 22 schools respectively within Kampong Thom Province and another 50 (17 females) from 38 schools within Siem Reap Province. The training took place at the Kampong Thom Provincial Pedagogical Training School. This training adopted all materials, methods and activities of the previous training.

B. Witnessing Justice: Public Village Forum (PVF)

B.1. ECCC Visits

Obtaining the truth from the KR leaders was the general expectation from the Cambodian people when the ECCC was established to try surviving KR leaders. On July 8-10, 2013, twenty-five villagers (10 female villagers) from Kampong Thom, Stung Treng and Koh Kong Provinces visited ECCC’s premises and observed the trial hearing before the TC in the ECCC’s Courtroom concerning Case 002/01 against the accused, Nuon Chea and Khieu Samphan. This visit took three days, which adds up to 75 person days in total. As the judicial process will become a thing of the past in the not–too-distant future, the villagers closely observed the trial proceedings the next day and afterward they made reflections on whether the ECCC could meet their expectations and help them mentally. During the proceedings, the accused Nuon Chea made a statement regarding the voluntary evacuation of city dwellers. Immediately, villagers reacted very strongly.

For instance, Ms. Tou Bunchan, 61, of Stung Treng Province responded,

> What Nuon Chea said was not true. He said the evacuation was to avoid being bombarded. So, why was my community also evacuated if we were already in the countryside? I was separated from my entire family. I want to ask Nuon Chea that if people were evacuated from one place, why the KR sent new people in as replacements to live in our homes. My community and family rather were sent to build dams, dig canals and do hard work in other places. With regard to food, my community and family had food in the village and rice fields there. So why did we need to evacuate? Nuon Chea’s word was not true at all. He’s a liar.

In addition, fifteen interviews were conducted to collect more thoughts on the proceedings and their recommendations to the ECCC.

B.2. Public Village Forum in Pech Changva Commune in Kampong Chhnang Province

On July 29-31, DC-Cam’s Public Village Forum team held a grassroots meeting in Pech Changva Commune, Baribo District, Kampong Chhnang Province, to discuss the history of Democratic Kampuchea and also trial proceedings at the ECCC. More than twenty villagers and forty students (34 female students) of Prapech Changva Secondary School participated in this one-day discussion in front of Pech Changva Commune hall. The major topics of discussion covered the construction of Kampong Chhnang airport and other related issues such as their personal experience during the KR regime and the losses of their family members. As the construction of the airport was not completed, it was abandoned after the KR’s fall in January 1979. Thus, the discussion between villagers and students attempted to find the answer to the question: if the airport had been completed, would Cambodia be able to defend itself or would it plunge the country into a worse state of war with Vietnam? During the forum, participants made their own reflections on the KR airport project.

B.3. Public Village Forum in Sochet Commune, Sandan District, Kampong Thom Province

On August 26-28, 2013, DC-Cam held nine Public Village Forums that involved 120 participants (approximately 30 female participants) from Sochet Commune, Sandan District, Kampong Thom Province. It is one of the most remote areas, where the population lives far from media access and cares very little about recalling their tragic history of the Democratic Kampuchea. Most argued that the KR’s irrigation system found in various locations in contemporary Cambodia was an ambitious attempt to increase rice yields for the agrarian society. During DC-Cam’s Public Village Forum, 120 participants argued that the success of this goal would have led the KR regime to rule with an independent and self-reliant economy. That was similarly stated in its four-year plan. This topic has thus drawn great interest from participants in Sochet Commune, Kampong Thom Province, and inspired a heated debate about where the projected rice production of the regime would be sent to and why people across the country were left starving between 1975 and 1979. The forum attempted to hear various views on the negative and positive sides of the KR’s legacy of rice export and mass hunger.

A remarkable quote from students and villagers about the forum was made to relate the increasing amount of rice in the cooperative's grange and the insufficient food for the people.

Sem Savin, 23, said: “This forum is very important in order to educate youth and it would be beneficial to have more forums in my village. I could learn about the entire history of the KR period. As I learnt from this forum, under that regime people harvested a lot of rice but they got only a watery porridge that made them too weak to do farming. I really don’t understand why the KR adhered to the ‘working hard but eating less’ mantra to treat people.”

B.4. Public Village Forum in Samlaut District, Battambang Province

Although there was a downpour in the early morning of September 17, 2013, the Public Village Forum was conducted in Samlaut District with the aims of encouraging debate about KR history among parents, students and teachers, documenting personal experiences of participants, and hearing their various perspectives on the current trial against former KR leaders. Around fifteen former KR members and forty children participated in the forum. This is an informal and local-based approach adopted by the Documentation Center of Cambodia (DC-Cam)'s 'Witnessing Justice Project' to enable villagers to exercise their rights of expression.

The choice of this district stemmed from its history as a site for popular uprisings in the mid-1960s and then the safe haven from which to launch guerrilla warfare against Vietnamese troops and its puppet state, People's Republic Kampuchea (PRK). Mired with this history, the team of Public Village Forum was eager to learn if these former KR members would react, either negatively or positively, to the public discussion of DK history and its inclusion into classroom. Then, the team attempted to understand their shared perspectives on the current trial against former KR leaders and other subsequent trial cases. To begin with, it's important to understand the historical background to the Samlaut District before touching down on the discussion.

C. Cham Muslim Oral History (CMOH)

Cham Muslim Oral History moved a big step forward when it received funding from the Air Asia Foundation for the Cham Identities as Social Enterprise Project (CISEP), for the period July 2013 to June 2014.

The objectives of the project are to preserve Cham culture and history, promote education and create an alternative development model to ensure the sustainability of the Cham way of life. A plan was outlined by DC-Cam with unanimous support from villagers who requested assistance in preserving their traditional skills and using the latter for educational and awareness creation purposes.

Other than education, the project also aims at providing villagers with an alternative source of income to supplement their earnings from agricultural activities. This aspect of the project will include setting up small-scale enterprises such as a craft collective. Income earned from these enterprises will also be used partly to support the upkeep of the museums and improve infrastructure, particularly renovation of the former KR dining hall.
The project will focus on five main areas:

1) Documentation and research: The team will collect folklore, photos and stories about the community’s struggle to preserve its identity throughout history. The collected materials will be stored and archived in a library in O-Trav⁠¹⁰. The team and one or two members of the community will jointly conduct various types of research related to Cham language and silk. This will result in the publication of a booklet or a book.

2) Renovation: The former dining hall in O-Trav will be renovated and used as a research center and exhibition hall. The abandoned bathroom will be upgraded to a library for the community where community members and general public can come and learn about various aspects of Cham culture and their struggle to retain their identity during the KR regime. This work will be contracted to a local contractor and a student architect with contributed labour from the villagers.

3) Exhibition: An exhibition about Cham silk and language will be hosted in the renovated building. The collected materials and research findings will be essential for the exhibit. This will open to the public in February 2014.

4) Art and craft: The most important aspect of this project is to research and revive Cham silk which is at the brink of dying out. Through producing the silk, it is our hope that their cultural identity will be maintained and income from sales will help increase their living standard and sustain the project. Several talented women of Sre Prey village⁠¹¹ will be chosen to work on this task. The project will be expanded to the rest of the two villages later.

5) Workshop: Workshops on Cham cultural identity and socio-economic issues will be hosted. The workshops will be beneficial for the younger generation and general public to learn about Cham identity and find ways to preserve it.

During the first month of the project, the team worked on several primary activities, including planning, making contacts, collating equipment lists, identifying looms and potential weavers, preparing a baseline survey, holding community meetings, and conducting ground research for color experiments.

Committee
Each site has its own committee consisting of elders, local authorities, and youth who will work closely with the team and help coordinate the project in their locale.

Equipment and Looms
We plan to buy a video camera and recorder which will be used to produce a documentary about Cham silk. We have bought two looms from the owner in Koh Dach⁠¹². Originally made of sralao, the history of the looms can be traced back to the KR period. Sralao was taken from a former KR dining hall in 1979 when the family returned to Koh Dach after having been evacuated to Pursat and living there for several years. After the KR collapsed, to earn a living, they restarted their weaving career with these looms. However, they are no longer in use because two of her daughters decided to work in Phnom Penh.

¹⁰ O Trav locates in O Trav village, O Trav Commune, Prey Nop District, Preah Sihanouk Province.
¹¹ Sre Prey village is one of O Russei Commune, Kampong Tralach District, Kampong Chhnang Province.
¹² Koh Dach locates in Kbal Koh village, Sangkat Koh Dach, Khan Russei Keo, Phnom Penh.
Baseline Survey
The team developed a baseline survey questionnaire on Cham silk covering its background, favored color and design, knowledge and weaving skill, and their contribution. This was conducted among some Cham in Sre Prey on July 19.

Potential weavers
A group of six women and three men in Sre Prey and Chan Kiek\textsuperscript{13} were selected for the art and craft project, one of whom knows how to weave. She will be appointed as one of the trainers.

Color experiment and Design
This experiment needs to be conducted in order to trace original Cham color and design which will be modernized using modern technology. The team has done some research on this topic and will start color experiments in August.

D. Public Information Room (PIR)

The PIR serves as a home for the public to access information held in DC-Cam’s archives. It functions in multiple ways similar to a library, meeting hall, reading hall and so on. This quarter PIR received 230 esteemed quests.

PIR’s guests for this quarter includes Cambodian remote villagers who came to search for their loved ones lost during the KR regime, students, teachers, foreign researchers and interns. Some of them spent up to two weeks in the PIR for their research.

The PIR’s guests came from RUPP, RULE, PUC, NUM, ECCC, ICRC, APP, University of Redcands, Mengo Travel, Northern Illinois University, Ministry of Culture and Fine Arts, University of QLD (Australia), University of Washington School of Law, Hunclong Global University, Versailles University, Chulalongkorn University, Grinnell College, Northern Illinois University, University of Central Missouri, Swansea University, Macquarie University, and Keisen University.

The topics of research include education and outreach on KR history, Khmer Krom during DK period, antiquities trade in Cambodia and background preliminary investigation into Australian investments in Cambodia, Khmer Krom during the Cold War/superpowers involvement in the rise of the KR, Cambodian-American refugee experience, memory of the KR, Buddhism and the KR Tribunal. For Cambodian students, they came to look for documents in supporting school assignments with regard to their study about KR history.

In addition, PIR hosted four groups of visitors from Where There Be Dragons, Hunclong Global University, Rotary Peace Center at Chulalongkorn University, and Harpswell Foundation. They were interested in learning about DC-Cam’s work as a whole and watched films such as “A River Changes Course” and “Don’t think I’ve Forgotten”.

Materials distributed free of charge include 143 monthly Searching for the Truth magazines, 96 copies of DK history textbooks in Khmer language, 72 copies of the outreach booklet

\textsuperscript{13} Chan Kiek is another village of O Russei Commune.
“Genocide: The Importance of Case 002”, and 85 copies of KRT observation booklets which describes daily proceedings at the substantive trials of the KR Tribunal’s TC.

E. Film “A River Changes Course” (Kbang Tik Tonle)

The Khmer title of the film, _Kbang Tik Tonle_, discusses the importance of water in Cambodians' lives. It means that if one holds a scoop of water, every single drop of the water has to be protected, because the river and the water mean life to the Cambodian people.

Twice a year in Cambodia, the Tonle Sap River changes course, while the river of life flows in a perpetual cycle of death and rebirth, creation and destruction. Working in an intimate, verité style, filmmaker Kalyanee Mam (Director of Photography for the Oscar-winning documentary _Inside Job_), spent two years following three young Cambodians as they struggled to overcome the crushing effects of deforestation, overfishing, and overwhelming debt. A breathtaking and unprecedented journey from the remote, mountainous jungles and floating cities of the Cambodian countryside to the bustling garment factories of modern Phnom Penh, _A River Changes Course_ traces a remarkable and devastatingly beautiful story of a country torn between the rural present and an ominous industrial future.

The Sundance award-winning filmmaker Kalyanee Mam returned to Cambodia before the 28 July election after _Kbang Tik Tonle_ won 12 awards at international film festivals. She followed up with Khieu Mok, a garment worker and one of the main subjects in the movie, on Election Day. In front of the camera Khieu said “only the people can change Cambodia. No government can beat the people.” For more information, watch these links:

This quarter, DC-Cam screened the film to approximately 500 people. The audiences include villagers, students, garment workers, NGO’s members, academics, etc. The following is the list of locations where the film screenings have been held:

On 24-26 September, A River Changes Course was screened in Chicago, IL, USA. In a press release of the Cambodian Association of Illinois, the Sundance-award-winning filmmaker Kalyanee Mam said of the impact of the film by saying “Today Americans, Cambodians, and people everywhere are connected as citizens of a global village, whose needs and wants are inextricably linked through our daily exchanges of goods, services, and ideas. And while our experiences may be different our shared stories unite and empower us to pursue greater justice for people everywhere”. F. Book of Memory

DC-Cam is writing and compiling a book of records of names of those who died under the KR regime from 1975 to 1979 and those who disappeared during that period. It will also include a section for family tracing purposes. DC-Cam already has in its database up to a million names of those who may have died under the KR.

The book of records will include basic information relating to KR history, its security apparatus, its rise, and its demise. It will also discuss concepts relating to disappearance and its impact on the psychological well-being of survivors today. These names will help in family tracing efforts. The book will be distributed free of charge to commune offices in Cambodia, so that people can see the names of their lost relatives and search for names that DC-Cam has on record. The book can then receive comments from villagers about the accuracy of the information as well as family tracing requests.

During this quarter DC-Cam was still in the process of collecting names from DC-Cam documents, crosschecking to avoid repetition, and finding out whether there are links between names. For this quarter, 258 worksheets were inputted into the computer and 29 names of people who died under the KR were recorded along with their biographies.

James Gerrand wrote in an email “I ask because a woman here and her cousin in Boston are trying to establish whether her husband was held and presumably died in S21. Apparently a friend has identified the man’s photo displayed in S21.” Upon request as such, DC-Cam allocated few documents including S-21 execution log and confession. Both execution log and confession were sent to James. In response, he wrote “[t]his will be most interesting so it will be greatly appreciated if you can send the confession”. We did so.

Dara EA, living in California, asked for his cousin’s photo and confirmation from DC-Cam as to if it is true that his cousin died at S-21. DC-Cam allocated one document called S-21 execution log on which his cousin was known to be arrested, sent to S-21 and killed. Dara EA wrote:

I just cannot say thanks enough for your effort, not just for me, but for all Cambodians who have been [affected] by this atrocity. I can go on and on. It took me almost thirty years to come to a point that I could manage my anger at the Cambodian people. Please do not be offended by my comment. I have been beyond that point now. My life is no longer a part of Cambodia today. My life has long gone beyond KR haunted spirit that was following for many many years. My cousin and I had done something together. I ended up with my family, and he ended up with KR killing machine. Anyway, I can go on and on. You may not understand it if you happen to be born after 1979. Thanks again for your effort. If I have anything that I can do for you, please do not hesitate to ask. I’m not going to ask for any of his confessions, etc.....It is not true anyway. I was going to ask for the picture. I don’t think I remember how he looked like. So it doesn’t make sense. Your finding for me shed the whole light for me that I have been thinking about him for quite sometimes. Thanks again And May God bless you.
G. Website Development

DC-Cam’s website is being updated regularly with postings on new developments, such as every issue of Searching for the Truth magazine, Observation booklets, chronology of the ECCC, information about DC-Cam’s activities (photos, reports etc.), and updates on the Sleuk Rith Institute. For this quarter, the number of visitors who visited DC-Cam’s website reached 11,228 of which 55.08% were new visitors and among whom were 2,219 visitors in the United States of America, 5,054 in Cambodia, 640 in Germany, 419 in Australia, 267 in Japan, 263 in France, 258 in Thailand, 186 in UK, 153 in Canada, and 102 in Singapore.

H. Cambodia Tribunal Monitor (www.cambodiatribunal.org)

DC-Cam, in collaboration with the Center for International Human Rights, funded by the US Holocaust Memorial Museum, undertakes certain responsibilities associated with the CTM website, www.cambodiatribunal.org. This website serves to facilitate public access to the ECCC and open discussion throughout the judicial process. The achievement highlights are as below:
Trial Blogs
Trial blogger, Simon Crowther, LL.M (International Human Rights) 2013 from Northwestern University School of Law, attended hearing sessions in Case 002 and wrote daily reports on legal proceedings at KRT’s TC. He wrote 15 daily reports for the blog (July alone). All 15 reports can be found at http://www.cambodiatribunal.org/blog/archive/201307

Hosting Video of ECCC Proceedings
The CTM team captured all trial footage to be posted on the website. The team attended a total of 13 hearing sessions. They produced 118 footages of the ECCC trial proceedings (in Khmer, English and French—court official languages). All 118 footages have been posted and are available at http://www.cambodiatribunal.org/multimedia/trial-footage

Backing up ECCC Documents
This quarter the team backed up 770 files and printed 6,315 pages of documents in Khmer and English from the ECCC's websites; and saved 250 files of the court transcripts equal to 18,400 pages in the external hard-drive.

Translation and Posting of CTM Articles
The team translated four articles and the Chronology of ECCC from English into Khmer:

2. It Takes More than One to Punish and Prevent Genocide, by Chhang Youk, 16 September 2012.
3. When Genocide Justice is Unfair, by Chhang Youk, 16 September 2012
5. Decision on Case 004 Suspect’s Rights to Counsel, by Anne Heindel, June 4, 2013
6. TC Decides that Accused Ieng Sary Is Fit and May Be Ordered to Participate by Video-Link, by Anne Heindel, November 30, 2012
7. TC Considers Implications of Accused’s Refusal to Testify, by Anne Heindel, July 22, 2013
10. Testimony of Stephen Heder Continues with Copious Quoting of Books and Documents, by Simon Crowther, 11 July 2013
12. TC Admits 1399 Written Statements and Transcripts in Lieu of Oral Testimony, by Anne Heindel, August 23, 2013

CTM Website Screenings
On July 12, the CTM team conducted a workshop at Build Bright University, a private entity, upon request, with 100 student participants. The workshop aimed at increasing students’ understanding of the importance of ECCC proceedings through the CTM website which contains, among other things, daily court reports about proceedings at the TC, trial footages, and expert commentaries regarding any issue arising at the ECCC.

Chea Chanrith, a participant of this workshop, said “to me this workshop is very important for students especially those who have less knowledge about the KR and the ECCC. It helps in improving our understanding.” Sieng Mengheang also shared positive feedback, saying “I have actually had so many questions about this topic since I was in high school. But now they are resolved. I hope you will conduct this workshop more often at other universities as well.”

Below are interesting questions posted by the students during the workshop:

1. Pol Pot wanted to eliminate all classes during the KR, but why did he create two classes—New People and Old People?
2. How did the KR regime collapse?
3. Was the truth revealed when Ieng Thirith was released, and Ieng Sary died?
4. Since everyone knows that KR leaders committed crimes, why did the ECCC spend so much money and time on the trial?
5. Will there be Cases 003 and 004 in the future?
6. What are the advantages and disadvantages of the ECCC?
7. Did Pol Pot force his followers to commit genocide?
8. Why did the KR starve and torture people?

On August 15th, the CTM team accompanied two Burmese human rights activists to Kampot Province to conduct an outreach workshop about the importance of the CTM website and the team’s work on justice at the ECCC. The workshop was held at Kampot Institute of Polytechic with the participation of 100 students. Two students shared their feelings about the workshop. Em Nang said, “After this workshop, I learned more about KR history, the ECCC, and also how to search for documents from the CTM’s website.” As for Chhuon Sokha, “Today I had a great opportunity to join the workshop. Previously, I only heard about this from the radio and elderly people. I now gain more knowledge on the KR regime.”

Below are interesting questions posted by the students during the workshop:

1. How many more documents are needed for Case 002?
2. How many zones were there during the KR?
3. Which zone had the highest fatality rate?
4. Will Ieng Thirith be tried since she is found mentally ill?
5. Why does it take so long for the ECCC to try the cases?
6. Why did the government ask for assistance from the international community to try the KR leaders?
7. Will the ECCC have Cases 003 and 004?

Another workshop was conducted on September 5th at Bright Hope Institute in Kampong Chhnang provincial town. There were 100 students from various majors including accounting, management and development who attended the workshop. In addition to an introduction to DK history, followed by a discussion of the CTM website, the Fair Trial Observation team presented ongoing developments at the ECCC following with a Q & A session. Below are interesting questions posted by the students during the workshop.

1. What were the benefits of the KR regime?
2. Who were the KR leaders besides Pol Pot?
3. What are the benefits of the KR Tribunal?
4. What is S-21?
5. Why did the ECCC separate Case 002 into mini-trials?
6. Who are the accused in Cases 003 and 004?
7. When was the ECCC created and for what purpose?
8. Why did the ECCC face financial problems? What is the solution?
9. If all the accused died, would justice be achieved?

See a field report at:

4. Research, Translation, and Publication

A. New Publications

A book on “Lessons from the Cambodian Experience with Truth and Reconciliation” authored by Jaya Ramji-Nogales, Temple University - James E. Beasley School of Law and John D. Ciocciari, University of Michigan - Gerald R. Ford School of Public Policy, was translated into Burmese language.

Some parts of the upcoming book When Duch Laughs were revised and forwarded to Professor Alexander Hinton at the University of Rutgers, Newark, for review and final proof reading. The book will be published together with survivor stories, rare photographs from S-21, Duch’s recent photographs, and the transcripts of Duch’s recent interview conducted by Savina Sirik and Dr. Kok-Thay Eng in 2012.

B. Historical Research and Writing

Christopher Dearing and Khamboly Dy continued their research on Anlong Veng community education. This research will produce far more than merely a book for Anlong Veng’s community education and industry; the vision is, indeed, to create a community education model that can be exported to other communities. DC-Cam aims to use this project as a pilot for developing similar curricula in other Cambodian communities. Mr. Dearing and Mr. Dy have finished the first draft of the book.

This quarter, one proposal for this project was developed and sent out to one potential donor. Funding is highly expected.

DC-Cam further wrote many letters of support as an exclusive sponsor of Christine Su for her project on “building a comprehensive genocide, conflict and human rights program in Cambodia”, Sarah Dickens for her research on the art and visual culture of the KR regime,
Randle Defalco for his research on KR famine and international law, Andrew Johnston for his research on lower level perpetrators in KR-era Cambodia and Nazi-era Germany and Poland, Chris Dearing on Anlong Veng and Burma/Cambodia project, and Professor James Tyner on a mapping project.

C. Translation and Publication of Books

The translation of The Killing of Cambodia: Geography, Genocide and the Unmaking of Space from English to Khmer language was completed in this quarter. It is 320 pages long.

5. Magazine, Radio, and Television

A. Searching for the Truth

For more than a decade, Searching for the Truth has been a leading magazine as a reference source about KR history, KR Tribunal, debates on genocide, reconciliation, democracy, and the rule of law. It has been contributing to DC-Cam’s main objectives—memory and justice—and portraying a good image of DC-Cam nationwide. Cambodian people seemed not likely to know DC-Cam as an institution but rather as the ‘Searching for the Truth’ organization. Truly, they call DC-Cam the ‘searching for the truth’ team instead of ‘DC-Cam’.

This quarter DC-Cam produced and published 9,000 copies of another three monthly Khmer issues of Searching for the Truth (issues 163, 164 and 165) by using its own small and outdated, two-colour printing machine. Each issue of the Khmer copies of the magazine were distributed widely to all 23 provincial halls and Municipality Halls, 176 district offices, 1,537 commune offices, 33 government offices, 28 embassies, the National Assembly, the Senate, three political parties, 18 universities and libraries, the ECCC, researchers, villagers, and students and individuals who visit DC-Cam’s premises.

The following is the content of Issue 163 with two samples letters searching for relatives.

Searching for My Husband

My name is Vong Phan, now living in Tuol Kraing village, Kraing Yov Commune, Sa-Ang District, Kandal Province. Before April 17th [1975], we lived in Beung Tumpun village, Phnom Penh. I separated from my husband, whose name was Ith Phanna alias Yort, when the KR soldiers entered Phnom Penh on April 17, 1975 at 9:00 in the morning. At that time, I had my daughter named Ith Chanry alias Asrey, who was four years old with me. At the time, I was also seven months pregnant with my second child.

In 1979, I heard that my husband came to search for me at my home village in Phnom Penh and at that time my relatives told him that I and the other children, as well as my parents, had died during the KR regime.

Nowadays, I and my children and my brothers—Phan and Phal—are living at Tuol Kraing village. If anyone knows my husband, please contact me at 012 992 171.

Searching for My Two Brothers

My name is Lim Keng, aged 43. I was born in Phnom Penh and now living at Ampov Diep village, Chroy Neang Nguon Commune, Srey Snam District, Siem Reap Province. My father’s name was Lim Chea Thai (deceased) and my mother’s name was Muy Chou (deceased). I have six siblings:
- Lim Sreng, brother, (disappeared)
- Lim Khim, brother, (disappeared)
- Lim Keng (me)
- Lim Pheng, brother, (he died of illness during the KR period)
- Lim Uy, brother, (he died of illness during the KR period)
- Lim Sakk, brother, (he died of illness during the KR period)

I am searching for my brothers: Lim Sreng and Lim Khim. In 1979, my brothers and I left Sraeng Bridge and intended to return to our homeland in Phnom Penh. When we arrived in Kralanh District, my two brothers asked an oxcart driver to help me board the oxcart as I could not walk because I was disabled since birth. Because there were lots of people walking, I separated from my brothers. Then, I asked an oxcart driver to drop me on the way, so that I could wait for my brothers. However, I did not see my brothers—until today.
Later, I was adopted by a villager who brought me to live at Ampov Dieb village—where I have been living until today.

I would like to appeal to anybody who has known my brothers—Lim Sreng and Lim Khim—to contact me at 097 413 4145.

B. Radio Broadcast "Voices of Genocide: Justice and the KR Famine"

DC-Cam’s community radio program “Voices of Genocide: Justice and the KR Famine,” explores the famine which occurred during the DK regime. The goals of this program are to provide survivors with legal and historical narratives of a major and often-overlooked source of suffering and mortality under the KR and to provide a common platform for survivors of the Cambodian genocide to share their individual experiences.

This quarter, the team made possible the broadcast of Episode 5 on four different radio stations in Phnom Penh, Battambang, Kampot, and Preah Vihear. This episode focuses on the topic of crimes against humanity and their applicability to famine, both in Cambodia and generally. This episode explains the concept of crimes against humanity, mentions some specific crimes and discusses whether these crimes could be associated with periods of famine both generally and within the specific context of the Cambodian experience under the KR.

On July 5 and 6, 2013, Episode 4 of “Voices of Genocide” was published in Reaksmei Kampuchea local newspaper; and on July 19 and 20, 2013 Episode 5; and on August 9, Episode 6, in the same newspaper as a series. Publishing the episodes in the newspaper is a way of expanding the coverage of “Voices of Genocide” in Cambodia. According to a reliable source, Reaksmei Kampuchea Newspaper publishes about 20,000 copies daily that are distributed nationwide. Thus, for those who missed the chance to follow the radio broadcast, they still can read it in the newspaper. The language used in each episode has been simplified which means that local villagers can understand the episodes more easily.

Questions from listeners sent to DC-Cam:

1. Why did the KR starve their people when they had produced a lot of crops? Where had those crops been transported to?
2. Why did the KR put their people to hard work?
3. Why did the KR kill their people?
4. Why did the KR separate people from their family members?
5. Why didn’t people rebel against the KR?
6. Has the KR Tribunal brought justice to the KR victims?
Further achievement in this quarter is in the form of a study tour to the former KR Sre Ambil (salt paddy) worksite in Kampot Province. As part of “Voices of Genocide: Justice and the KR Famine”, Men Pechet, a team leader, brought a group of seven university students to visit the site, where thousands of people were put into hardship and given insufficient food to eat. The study tour aimed at providing a better understanding among the younger generation and KR survivors in terms of DK history. The area of Sre Ambil was part of the Southwest Zone or Zone 405 under the absolute control of Chhit Choeun alias Ta Mok or “The Butcher”, who died in July 2006 after spending seven years in the detention facility of the Cambodian Military Court, awaiting trial.

From September 27 to 29, Team Leader Men Pechet brought another group of ten university students, from the Royal University of Phnom Penh, Royal University of Law and Economics, Build Bright University, University of Cambodia, Panhasastra University, and Institute of Foreign Languages, to visit Tramkak cooperatives and Kraing Ta Chan Prison in Takeo Province where many Cambodian people were put to hard labor and given insufficient food to eat. By visiting these places, the project seeks to promote better understanding, among both Cambodian youth and KR survivors, of an important part of their shared history. The trip is designed to facilitate dialogue concerning KR history.

6. National and International Cooperation

A. Selected Research Assistance

DC-Cam provides assistance to academics, researchers, and students upon request. This quarter the center received a number of requests from researchers who conducted research on different topics relating to the KR regime and its impact on Cambodian society today such as:

Jenny Mith conducted research on learning more about the Cambodian-American refugee experience. She used philosopher Michel Foucault’s framework of biopolitics to find parallels between life for a Cambodian refugee living in the United States and life for a victim living through the Cambodian Genocide. Ultimately, she hoped to support the claim that certain social, cultural, and political practices and policies in the US were responsible for perpetuating the traumatic experience of the refugee. She visited DC-Cam as well as the Tuol Sleng Genocide museum to obtain records about the way that victims of the genocide were treated by the KR.

Simona Pinton is a student of Professor Ron Sly at the Seattle University School of Law. She is an international lawyer and a researcher in international criminal law and human rights law. In the last seven years she taught these subjects at the Universities of Venice and Padua in Italy. Recently she taught a course on International Criminal Law at Wake Forest Law School as a visiting professor.

She holds a Ph.D. in International Law from the University of Padua and an LLM in International Law from UC Berkeley. She served on the prosecutorial team for the UN Tribunal for the Genocide in Rwanda, in Arusha, working on the Butare and Seromba cases. In the last year she has been a visiting scholar at the University of Washington School of Law and she is currently continuing to work on a book on the role of restorative justice in international law.

She requested to conduct research at DC-Cam and would like to apply for a summer internship or other programs. She was interested in knowing more about the Truth, History and Education Committee and the transitional justice model, in the form of an educational program, to be used in post-conflict societies.

Malin Sofie Alvestad Hjelle is a Norwegian student planning to come to Cambodia and DC-Cam in September to do research for her master’s degree on the Cambodian educational system and how it has handled the genocide. Kjetil Grødum of Stiftelsen Arkivet recommended her to DC-Cam so that she could study materials relating to the KR tribunal. She was also interested in the Genocide Education project.

Patrick Pfeiffer was enrolled as a student in the Master Program for Social Anthropology at Martin-Luther-University Halle-Wittenberg, Germany. The program required a field research on a particular disciplinary question. He planned to come in August/September 2013. The main goal of the research was to identify and analyze Cambodian commemorative culture related to the genocide. He was interested in a comparison between Cambodia and Germany of how the past was remembered in the present. He planned to visit several museums (especially the Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum) and examine the depiction of violence and the treatment with human remains. He was also interested in genocide education project.

Professor JoAnn DiGeorgio-Lutz, Ph.D., Department Head and Graduate Advisor of Department of Political Science at Texas A&M University-Commerce, plans to come to DC-Cam in October to conduct her research on certain topics relating to the KR regime, particularly women under Democratic Kampuchea.

Nicole Jenne is a doctoral researcher from the European University Institute in Florence, Italy. She is also a visiting scholar of S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies (RSIS), Graduate School of Nanyang Technological University, Singapore. She was conducting her research on the Thai-Cambodian border conflict. Her dissertation concerns the management of territorial conflict within the context of regional security, being the Thai-Cambodian case one of her case studies.

Tan Sock Keng, a student from National University of Singapore, is planning to conduct her research on the Renakse Petitions to be done in 2014. Mainly, she will seek to reconstruct the project to collect petitions and signatures from people all over Cambodia, covering its initiation, implementation and outcome. She requested assistance in her research while helping DC-Cam in their museum project.

DC-Cam assisted PhD student, Andrew Johnston to conduct field research in Kampot Province and Anlong Veng District as well as looking at original documents at the office. DC-Cam also helped him in translation of main documents and interpretation of interviews.

DC-Cam continued to host Reiko Okawa, an associate professor from Meiji Gakuin University, Japan, who is conducting her research on Islam in Cambodia. In this process DC-Cam assisted her in identifying interviewees, making field trips and locating relevant documents. She is writing her paper on “Cham Hidden Documents in Cambodia: Islam in the Pol Pot Period.”

DC-Cam helped to allocate some documents to support research on culture and the arts during the KR regime, conducted by Malte von der Brelie from University of Göttingen, Germany.

DC-Cam assisted Professor James Tyner from Kent State University for his research on the KR health care system. The assistance DC-Cam provides to Professor Tyner includes document allocation, document translation, interview summary, and field trip research.

Dear Youk, Khamboly, Kheang and Kok-Thay. (I hope you do not mind me sending this to all of you)

I do not know if you remember me, but I stayed for some time in Phnom Penh last year doing a field-study about your ‘Genocide Education Project’. Since then, I have written a master’s thesis in history didactics with the title Didactical Thinking and Post-Conflict Dilemmas in Cambodian History Teaching. (Attached to this Email)

The thesis investigates some parts of the ‘Genocide Education Project’, but naturally, it has some limitations in terms of selecting relevant source material for analysis. I guess many parts could seem irrelevant to you, especially the chapter concerning Cambodian circumstance since 1979, but I think this is necessary for Norwegian readers. At the same time, it could definitely have included more, but there are strict limitations on how many pages such a thesis can be.

My approach and intention of writing this thesis was an attempt to highlight the didactical considerations both you and Cambodian high-school teachers have to make in a difficult environment. I know you are the experts on this, and I apologize if I wrote something which is incorrect, but I do hope that an outsider’s view on this might have some value to you.

I wish to thank you all again for helping me during my stay, and also wish you good luck in
If you want me to send a physical copy of the thesis to you, then please let me know and I will mail it.

Sincerely,
John Erling Langeland

B. Participation in Conferences

On July 23, in collaboration with the Network for Human Rights Documentation-Burma (ND-Burma), DC-Cam met human rights activists, archivists, peacemakers from five institutions, such as Kachin Women’s Association, Pa-Oh Youth Organization, Lahu Women’s Organization Ta’ang Student and Youth Organization/ND-Burma Office and Palaung Women’s Organization/ND-Burma, on documenting human rights abuse in Yangon, Burma, for the purpose of providing assistance possible in the establishment of a Documentation Center/Truth Commission in Myanmar. The meeting was convened again on July 26 for the discussion of the final agreement.

In the meeting, key challenges faced by the ND-Burma were indicated, including the government’s opposition to ND-Burma’s strategic objectives, ethnic divisions undermining coherence between local and national-level objectives, public understanding and appreciation of the meaning and utility of key strategic terms (i.e., “documentation”) remaining low, and the lack of technical expertise in setting up, sourcing, and managing a documentation center.

In response to these issues, DC-Cam proposed the following approaches:
1. Assume a more nuanced approach to political stakeholders in order to leverage greater flexibility and freedom in strategic activities;
2. Develop a more nuanced communications strategy that addresses multiple angles and audiences;
3. Consider the expansion of public education activities in order to address public misunderstanding and misapprehension of strategic concepts and activities; and
4. Focus on core competencies as key short-term goal in order to improve long-term sustainability, credibility, and program quality. See DC-Cam’s statement in Appendix.

Resulting from the two pre-meetings above, the first workshop was held at Rose Hall on July 27 with approximately 70 participants from Networks for Human Rights, Peace, Education and Legal aid NGOs. The main scheme of the workshop addressed the issues above. The following meetings were at the 88 Generation and Yangon School of Political Science. Read the introductory remarks by Youk Chhang, Memory of Myanmar, at http://nd-burma.org/news/781-memory-of-myanmar.html

On August 21-24, Director Youk Chhang participated in the Common Lives Film Festival which is a side event of the 3rd International Conference on International Research and Development (ICIRD 2013) in Thailand. The festival is part of Thammasat Human Rights Film Festival featuring films and documentaries on human rights in Southeast Asia. As a producer of “A River Changes Course” Mr. Chhang provided the screening of the film upon invitation and this was followed by a Q&A session.

On August 25th, Director Youk Chhang attended a seminar at Jim Thomson Art Center in Bangkok, Thailand, as a speaker. The seminar was organized by the Initiative of Museum and Library for Peace. Mr. Chhang discussed a topic of “Memory and Justice: Killing Field, Managing Memory and Cambodia Today”. The organizer wrote “[t]he experience of Cambodia is, therefore, significant to Thai society and its quest for education for peace which is a foundation for peace within and beyond.”

C. International Cooperation

As a result of DC-Cam’s mission to Burma from July 23rd to August 1st, DC-Cam accepted two Burmese activists from ND-Burma and the 88 Generation to work, learn and share experience at DC-Cam. The two are:

1. Ms. Nang Htoi Rawng, born in 1986 in Kutkai, Myanmar, has been working with Kachin Women’s Association Thailand (KWAT) since 2008, where she works as a coordinator of the Income Generation Program, managing the project’s finance and communication with stakeholders. Since May 2011, Ms. Nang has served as coordinator of the Documentation and Research Program. Ms. Nang’s main responsibilities are proposal and report writing, project and financial management, and fieldwork data verification. In 2012, Ms. Nang was elected to represent KWAT in the ND-Burma Network and served as a member on the Management Board for a one-year term (2012 July – June 2013).

Two weeks report on DC-Cam Internship
Reported by: San Htoi

Summary of the report

This is a report on my two weeks internship at DC-Cam, Cambodia. I arrived in DC-Cam on 11th August and now it has been two weeks that I am learning here. During two weeks, I had opportunity to learn about the concept of documentation, the system and structure of Documentation, linking between documentation and legal requirement, methods of documentation and collection data.

System of Documentation in DC-Cam has 5 different categories; those are 1) Paper Documents, 2) Interview Documents, 3) Physical documents, 4) Photos documents, and 5) film documents. Under those 5 categories, there are also many small sections again such as memorial, prison as a museum and Mass grave etc.

I also have a chance to learn about researching project. In this project they have two steps; one is collecting document and another one is analysis. Base on the research, they wrote books such as what was happened in Cambodia during the KR regime, Muslim experience before and during KR regime and etc.

DC-Cam has been doing documentation on both survivors and former KR regime. I learned that DC-Cam also helps and urges the victims to participate at the court process if they want to. I was also brought to visit to see Killing Field, TUOL SLENG museum and National museum.
Then, I got a chance to go to Kampot Province to join a workshop regarding the history of democratic Kampuchea, updating on ECCC process that was presented by DC-Cam’s CIM team at the University. I met with over a hundred students who participated at the workshop. I conducted interviews with two students and one villager.

I also visited the Mosque in Cham village, Sihanouk village and it is DC-Cam’s Cham Identity project as well. The project is now process of assessment on architecture design of KR dining hall and also preserve silk textile of Cham culture.

I also went to the Takao Province to join the Teacher of Training (High school teachers) that was one of the DC-Cam projects too. The training was about how to teach A History of Democratic Kampuchea textbook, which is publish by DC-Cam. On that day, they conducted a workshop on the definition of Genocide for the teachers.

And every morning, I have an English class for one hour. In this class, we are focusing on International treaties and vocabularies.

Experiences and Learning

If ND-Burma wanted to establish the tribunal in the future, I think that we need to discuss deeply among the ND-Burma member organizations to decide time period of the most serious situation had happened in the past. What who will work focus on it. Also became clearer that Human rights documentation work needs a lot of concentration and very good long-term planning.

As ND-Burma situation, we can start with physical document such as museum and memorial, public hearing and show film screening as it is a short-term objective that ND-Burma has already discussed at UTP workshop. But at first, we need to conduct assessment in the community. We also need the reviewing of our data quality and questionnaires. If needed, we should do the consultation with lawyers in order to develop the questionnaire in legal terms. We also should think that how we can approach the perpetrator in terms of interviewing and collecting the information from them.

As Poe Youk explains, we might face several challenges for our work from networks, political situation, and technology or methods. This is a good point that we need to think and prepare it in order to overcome or tackle those challenges.

Moreover, I was able to understand how documentation is important for the history of the country and not just for human rights abuses. It is important memory for the future generation. It can be used as a tool for the people’s understanding and to forgive each other but not forget about it. I also gained more knowledge about the history of Cambodia.

In conclusion: I feel like, I learned a lot from DC-Cam. But still I need some areas that I would like to learn more like chain of custody, legal methodology, public informing and the system of data upload at the website.

2. Mr. Chit Min Lay was born in 1974 in Yangon, Myanmar. In 1991, he enrolled in the University of Yangon. In 1996 and 1998, Mr. Chit participated in the student pro-democracy uprising as a university student. In 1998, the year of his graduation, Mr. Chit was arrested and sentenced to 31 years in prison for his role in the democracy and human rights movement. After spending 14 years behind bars, he was released on January 12, 2012. After his release, Mr. Chit has participated in capacity building. programs held by the British Council in Yangon and other non-governmental organizations. Currently, Mr. Chit serves in The 88 Generation Peace and Open Society Organization as the deputy in charge of the Education Sector, encouraging citizen participation in Myanmar’s transition to democracy by promoting human rights, civil rights, multi-cultural understanding and tolerance.

Two Weeks Report on DC-Cam Internship

Reported by: Chit Min Lay

I arrived in Cambodia on August 11, 2013. Pechet welcomed me in the airport. Phnom Penh airport is small but not crowded. Then he took me to the Vietnamese restaurant. When we were having dinner, he explained to me about Cambodia and tomorrow’s plan. The air was fresh, Cambodia night scenes was beautiful. I live in near nice independent monument, next to DC-cam office. My room is clean and can access internet in my room. When I opened my Facebook I saw the news that our great journalist and writer Maung Won Ta died this morning. I was so sorry for him.

Next morning Pechet knocked on my door and took me to DC-Cam’s office. Farina welcomed us and she introduced every staff of DC-Cam office. I was delighted to meet with Mr. Youk, Farina and Pechet again. At 8 o clock I met with Mr. Youk. He explained to me about documentation and Cambodian history. He taught me the remarkable point for documentation that not to commercialize the memory using victims for money, memory is using suffering from better life. Mr. Youk treated me to lunch this afternoon. Then we visited to notorious former S21 prison (now Tuol Sleng genocide museum). Before I entered the museum, I did not think it was a former prison but inside the compound was horrible. Savina explained to me about S21 prison. I saw cells inside the room. Shackles, handcuffs, and desk are inside the room. On the floor beside the desk were wire, a stick, and another twisted wire stick. Prisoners were brutally interrogated in these rooms. If the prisoner did not give complete confession, he was killed. More than 12,000 prisoners in S21 prison died under torture or were trucked to the killing fields. I entered these cells. I missed my past. I spent nearly 14 year in the cell. I had no chance to speak with my inmates for a long time. I lost my friends in Mawlamaine prison. They died by torture and mal-nutrition. In Tuol Sleng museum, I saw thousands of black and white portraits line the wall. I did not dare to see their eyes. I feel sad. The empty room, tiny brick cells, handcuffs, desk, knives, rag cloths are telling the horrible past. I took photo with S21 survivor Mr. Chum Mey. I respect him. I wanted to speak with him for a long time. I wanted to invite him to my country.

Mr. Youk explained to me about how they tried to be a museum in Cambodia. The Cambodia government cannot support this memorial site because it’s difficult to show the public but they did. Memorial sites, prisons, mass gravil es are amuseums. These are and can be used as documentation. The main point in documentation are (1) Paper documentation, (2) physical documentation, (3) Interviewing, (4) Photos, (5) filming. And he taught me if I hope to [build this type of project to] get sponsors from outside because I cannot do [this work] freely.

I visited the killing field museum. Mr Socheat Nean helped me. He explained about the killing field museum.

I took photos. I saw the trees those were tools to kill the child. Many foreigners visited there.

I went to Kampot Province with Ms. Chea Phalla, Ms Kim Sovannday, Ms Dy socheata, Nicola and San hthio. On the road to Kampot was very nice. I ate fresh fruits and fresh sea food. Next day they made presentation. After presenter I interviewed a monk and two Cham Muslim girls. The monk knows our country and daw aung san suu kyi. He respects her. He answered my question, Buddha teaching is loving kindness not relative to any terror. Cham Muslim girls also told me they never been to Tuol Sleng museum. They will try to know Cambodian history more. They go to the mosque every Friday.
After this documentation, I began to understand Cambodia’s history. Cambodia’s ancient name is Kambuja in 802 AD. Jayavarman II declared himself the King marking the beginning of the Khmer empire that lasted over 600 years. It was colonized by French in the mid-19th century. Cambodia gained independence in 1953. The King Sihanouk ruled the regime before Lon Nol’s coup the power. The Vietnam war extended into Cambodia, giving rise to the KR, which took Phnom Penh in 1975. The KR period (1975_ 1979) refers to the rule of Pol Pot, Nuon Chea, Ieng Sary, Son Sen, Kieu Sampham and KR communist party over Cambodia, which KR renamed as Democratic Kampuchea. The four year period cost approximately 2 million lives through the combined result of torturing, disease, starvation, and forced labour. Due to the large number of deaths during the rule of the KR, this is often considered as genocide. KR were toppled with the invasion of Vietnam. The UN-led-peacekeeping mission that took place from 1991 to 1995 sought to end violence in the country and establish a democratic system of government through new elections. In 1990s there was a marked decline in insurgent activity. In 1998 Pol Pot himself died and other key KR 1999 for crimes against humanity. Since 1990 Cambodia has gradually recovered demographically and economically from KR regime, but the psychological scars affect many Cambodian families. The current government teaches little about KR atrocities in school. Cambodia has a very young population. The younger generation only knows the KR through word- of-mouth from their parents and elders. In 1997 Cambodia established a KR Trial Task Force to create a legal structure to try the remaining leaders for war crimes. But progress was slow because the government was reluctant to bring the KR leaders to trial.

On August 17 we visited Sihanouk Village with director Mr. Youk Chhang, Ms. Farina So, Ms. Sa Fatity and San Htoi. The road to Sihanouk Village was very nice. We met with Cham Muslim leaders in O-Trav Village. At evening we went to the sea. The water was flowing quite strong. I swim there. At that time our famous writer Min Lu died.

I have learned from DC-Cam and Cambodia that teach me a lot. Christ teaches me English skills and human rights law. Bong Terith explained to me about the law. Cambodia uses civilian law. In that law perpetrators have right to defend hiself so he tried to get more evidence. For the KR perpetrator, the court uses local laws and international law. The Cambodian government stored the biographies of former KR members. DC-Cam has more than 2,000 of former KR member’s biographies. Some KR members live in the US and other countries. The main point of documentation is memory and justice. Former KR members never told directly about their stories. Most of the DC-Cam members were born after KR regime, but they understand how to ask questions.

I want to write more about DC-Cam and Cambodia. Cambodia is a very interesting place to learn for our country. I have to learn here. This August is black August for our country. We lost three great writers in this month. Tens of thousands of people killed in August 1988. I participated the pro-democracy uprising in August 1998. I miss my country. But August is not black for me here. I see rays of light in future.

During the course of their internship, Mr. Dearing provided 18 hours of English Language Human Rights Education to the two Myanmar/Burmese delegates from ND-Burma above. While the education program’s main objective was to improve their English language proficiency, the education program also covered the following lessons:

a) Corporate social responsibility in Myanmar/Burma (based on New York Times® article);
b) Review of Universal Declaration of Human Rights;
c) Analysis and Comparison of Genocide Convention; Hague Convention; and Geneva Conventions;

d) Review of ICCPR, CEDAW;

e) Introduction to the ECCC (and international criminal law in general).

DC-Cam provided permission to Kent State University to use one photo depicting forced laborers working on an irrigation project for the publication titled Introduction to Geography: People, Places and Environment.

Dr. Maung Zarni, Associate Fellow, UMCEDEL, Visiting Senior Research Fellow, Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences of University of Malaya was invited by DC-Cam to lecture, from 4-8 September, on the human rights situation in Burma, in order to enhance DC-Cam’s short training program for the first batch of Burmese human rights researchers.

DC-Cam received a group of eight students and two faculty members from the University Center for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities and University of Washington. Dr. Kok-Thay Eng talked to these students about Cambodia’s recent history, particularly the KR history, as well as the work of DC-Cam.

Dear Youk Chhang and Friends at DC-Cam,

On behalf of ND-Burma, we would like to say thank you so much for all your help, given an opportunity, support and host for the internship program successfully. We appreciated your guidance and help in helping to develop the documentation skills and knowledge’s for San Htoi and Chit Min Lay.
It was a great opportunities for young activists to learn the impressive works of DC-Cam on memorials and seeking justice.

Thank you again for sending us all of the related information, news, reports, photos and their activities during the internship program. We hope both of them can share and practically apply what they gained from valuable internship program for seeking Truth and Justice through systematic documentation as fulfill of ND-Burma’s short and long goals.

We also request them to do an experience exchange with ND-Burma members and our networks in Yagoon. As we plan to start our Unofficial Truth Project soon, they will be part of the working group in helping us to develop our strategies and we will keep you updated about this project.

Sincerely

Han Min Soe
Coordinator
On behalf of ND-Burma.

7. Staff Development

A. Advanced Degree Training

Staff development at DC-Cam is a key towards succeeding in its main objectives of memory and justice. Given its importance, advanced degree opportunity is provided with no discrimination of gender, race and religion. This reflects the policy of the Center which states that “male and female staff should be given equal encouragement and opportunity to study abroad”.

For instance, this quarter, Ms. Farina So, Cham minority and author of The Hijab of Cambodia: Memories of Cham Muslim Women after the KR has been admitted to a PhD program in Global Studies at University of Massachusetts Lowell (UMASS Lowell), USA, which started in September 2013. However, she will work intermittently at DC-Cam on her social enterprise project, Cham Identity, which is funded by Air Asia Foundation.

Ms. Savina Sirik, Office Manager and Museum Director, was admitted into an MA program in Geography at Kent State University, USA, which began since August 2013. She will be on academic leave for two years. However, she is still in charge of all project activities that were under her care at DC-Cam.

Ms. Kunthy Seng graduated with an MA in Thai Stuies from Chulalongkorn University, Thailand. She will be back to work on Sleuk Rith’s Museum of Memory very soon.

DC-Cam Staff in School
B. International Training

Ms. Savina Sirik and Phalla Chea obtained certificates for the completion of Democracy Development from Shally Prasad, Director of the Office of Democracy and Governance, USAID Cambodia. Savina and Phalla completed the Major Open Online Course presented by Stanford University and Coursera Inc.

8. Media Coverage

A. Selected Articles

On July 15th The Star Online posted an article entitled “Healing after the Killing” written by Chin Mui Yoon. Youk Chhang was quoted in many passages, such as “[t]he tribunal officially recognises a crime that was not even acknowledged years ago”. This article is available at http://www.thestar.com.my/Lifestyle/Features/2013/07/15/Healing-after-the-killing.aspx

On July 16th The Bangkok Post posted an article entitled “Recording Unheard Voices”. The writer spoke to Ms. So Farina, DC-Cam’s team leader of the Cham (Muslim) Oral History Project which uses oral history to contribute to reconciliation in Cham Muslim communities in the southern provinces of Thailand. This article is available at http://www.bangkokpost.com/lifestyle/family/360060/recording-unheard-voices

On July 16th The Guardian web-media posted an article entitled “Cambodian Reality TV Show Reunites Families Torn Apart by the KR” and quoted Mr. Youk Chhang’s view on healing the wounds of the Killing Fields. Mr. Chhang said “[i]t’s a very Cambodian way of trying to bring some closure . . . you put the story on stage and there is a bit of drama and a happy ending.” He went on by saying “I think reconciliation is very personal. For me I couldn’t. I have no more tears to cry. So I couldn’t go on stage to cry.” The article is available at http://www.guardian.co.uk/world/2013/jul/16/cambodia-reality-tv-reunites-families-khmer-rouge

On July 22nd The Telegraph posted an article entitled “KR killers Live in Contented Retirement as Cambodia Struggles with the Legacy of Pol Pot” and quoted Dara Vanthan, DC-Cam’s Deputy Director as saying “I think the tribunal has had a great impact on Cambodian society” because “almost two-thirds of Cambodian people are under 30. The tribunal is a means for them to learn about our history.” See more at http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/asia/cambodia/10192536/Khmer-Rouge-killers-live-in-contented-retirement-as-Cambodia-struggles-with-the-legacy-of-Pol-Pot.html and http://www.dnaindia.com/world/1863646/report-pol-pot-s-henchmen-enjoying-a-quiet-retirement
In the 22-28 July issue of e-Paper, Focus Malaysia, there are two articles featuring Mr. Youk Chhang as a Cambodian hero and a custodian of Cambodia’s past. See the detailed stories in Appendix A & B.

On July 25th Sunday Times posted an article online entitled “Young Cambodian Voters Look Beyond the Tragic Past” which discussed how the KR issue became a topic for the 28 July national election. Mr. Youk Chhang was quoted by saying “the KR period has been heavily politicized by all parties. But it is an increasingly ineffective tactic as young people no longer pay attention to such campaign rhetoric.” He said “[at] the next election, in next five years, politicians will realize this is no longer a tool to gain support”. See more at http://www.sundaytimes.lk/analysis/35675-young-cambodian-voters-look-beyond-tragic-past-by-cat-barton.html

Mr. Youk Chhang, Director of DC-Cam provided a lengthy interview to Austrian magazine Die Furche. The interview focused on a variety of issues including the use of the KR past in the national election campaign, the trauma undergone by KR victims and how to address it, the issue of reconciliation and forgiveness and how the younger generation learns about their history. See more in Appendix D.

On July 26th, The Phnom Penh Post published a feature story “Award-Winning Director Will Show Her Work Country-Wide” which mentioned that A River Changes Course will be shown at universities and villages nation-wide. “Rather than spur outrage or lay blame at politicians and corruption, the film aims to get people thinking about the bigger issue of Cambodian’s all over industrial development”, said Youk Chhang. “DC-Cam to Help Burma Record Rights Abuses”, The Cambodia Daily, Monday, August 5, 2013, p.19. See more in Appendix E

“Garment Workers See Lives Reflected on the Big Screen”, The Phnom Penh Post, August 5, 2013, p.19. See more in Appendix F

Ly Sok Kheang, Ph. candidate and Witnessing Justice Project Team leader, contributed an article to the Phnom Penh Post on August 13th on rumour and hearsay before, during and after the Cambodian national election on July 28. See more in Appendix G

By Joy Lee, “From the Killing Fields to Economic Transformation”, The Star Online, August 14, 2013. In the article, Mr. Youk Chhang discusses the focus on transforming from a purely social entity to a social enterprise in competing against global business. Mr. Chhang said “Remembering, sharing and learning about the genocide is important for us but getting into the social enterprise, using existing heritage sites, helps us move on and compete”. See more at http://www.thestar.com.my/Business/SME/2013/08/14/From-killing-fields-to-economic-transformation.aspx

“Political Will Lacking as Much as KRT Funding”, The Cambodia Daily, Tuesday, September 3, 2013, p.1-2. Mr. Youk Chhang was quoted as saying “[w]hen you can bring back support from people, it will bring confidence to the international community to look into this. We are here for the public, here for justice, not here for the project of the ECCC.” See more in Appendix I.

B. Radio

On August 30th, Kalyanee Mam, award-winning film director, producer and cinematographer, was interviewed by David Peck on Face2Face Canadian audio media regarding A River Changes Course, a 12 award-winning documentary film. It was a 42:08 minutes talk on many issues including a dramatic change in Cambodian recent elections, poverty and development. Listen to Face2Face at: http://rabble.ca/podcasts/shows/face2face/2013/08/kalyanee-mam-on-film-making-and-social-change

C. TV

On August 14th, Sok Kheang Ly, PhD candidate and Witnessing Justice Project Team Leader of DC-Cam was invited by CTN TV to speak about rumour and hearsay after the July 28 Cambodian Election. The show was rebroadcasted for another 3 days.

On August 28th, Kamboly Dy, PhD candidate and school director of Sleuk Rith Institute in charge of Genocide Education, was invited by CTN TV to speak about the prevention of violence in Cambodia. The show was rebroadcasted for another 3 days.

D. Listserv

Every day DC-Cam sends out information about the KR and the ECCC to 4000 Listserv members.
9. Permanent Center: The Sleuk Rith Institute

The construction of the Sleuk Rith Institute has a long way to go given that many factors should be cautiously taken into account including time, financial management, political arrangement, and building design. Professor Ron Slye, one of the Legal Advisors to DC-Cam is negotiating specific terms with Zaha Hadid on the architectural agreement. DC-Cam Director, Mr. Youk Chhang, will discuss these terms further when he visits the US at the end of October 2013. In the meantime, the three main components of the Institute—School, Museum of Memory, and Research Center—are functioning progressively.

A. School of Genocide, Conflict and Human Rights

Awaiting a license from the Cambodian Ministry of Education, Youth and Sport, the School Project team consisting of Khamboly Dy, Sok-Kheang Ly, Farina So, Christine Su and Phala Chea have developed a student handbook for the three-month certificate program. The crucial focus of the certificate program is courses designed for prospective young leaders – that is, new high school graduates and university freshmen. The program includes five courses: Understanding Genocide, Conflict and Human Rights; History Conflict of Southeast Asia; War, Peace and Reconciliation; Leadership Development; and Study Skills and Research Methods for Higher Education. The handbook is complete and will be put into a design for publication.

Furthermore, the School Project team created syllabi for the five courses above. The target audience would already be familiar with the structure and requirements of academic courses, and would be more likely to seek out information and enroll in the program. Although it has not yet been determined whether or not the certificate courses will have transferable academic credit, the prospect of a bachelor of arts program in Genocide, Conflict, and Human Rights (GCHR) studies and the certificate as a precursor to it did figure in the discussion. It is not uncommon for university students in Cambodia to enroll in more than one university/pursue more than one degree, so perhaps they would be interested in adding a new dimension to their current academic pursuits (there are no other GCHR programs in Cambodia).

This quarter, the Sleuk Rith Institute made one announcement seeking exceptional MBA students to serve as Business Associates in Fall 2013 for a minimum of two months. Their primary role will be to produce a business plan for the operation and functioning of the SRI’s School of Genocide, Conflict and Human Rights.

Fall 2013 Business Associate Internship Program

Project on School of Genocide, Conflict and Human Rights

The Sleuk Rith Institute: A Permanent Documentation Center of Cambodia

The Sleuk Rith Institute (SRI), a permanent Documentation Center of Cambodia (DC-Cam), is seeking two exceptional MBA students to serve as Business Associates in Fall 2013 for a minimum of two full months. Their primary role will be to produce a business plan for the operation and functioning of the SRI’s School of Genocide, Conflict and Human Rights.
The Sleuk Rith Institute is the leading center of genocide studies and research in Asia, fostering memory, justice and reconciliation in Cambodia, the region and the global community. The Institute will consist of three major components: Museum of Memory, School, and Research Center. Like the leaves for which it is named, the Sleuk Rith Institute is a place to build the future leaders of Cambodia by preserving knowledge of its past. With 70% of the country born after the KR era, Cambodians run a risk of losing the understanding, memories, and lessons from their difficult history. At the same time, a rapidly globalizing Cambodia faces new challenges of sustainable growth, democratic integrity, and human rights respect.

The School is designed based on the Cambodian concept of Chor-tean Sala. Clergymen describe Chor-Tean Sala as the holy hall where villagers come to learn and celebrate the traditional ceremonies with the six paths of holiness. The word “Chor” in Khmer means “six”. Thus, “Chor” here represents the six paths of holiness: holy body, holy sound, holy smell, holy taste, holy atmosphere and holy mind. The School's Genocide, Conflicts and Human Rights Program will be comprehensive, intertwining global-local concepts to achieve knowledge and skills.

The School Mission

Through its intensive, focused courses and related activities and events, SRI's School will provide students with the opportunity to study the nature of conflict and its consequences. The School will train and motivate exceptional Cambodian and international students toward the creation of a new generation of informed, determined, and decisive leaders; to gain knowledge and understanding of factors that contribute to genocide, conflict and human rights abuses; and to engage in analysis and dialogue about critical issues. The school will start up with a certificate program in Genocide, Conflict, and Human Rights followed by bachelor and master programs. For the certificate program, the target audiences include high school graduates and university freshmen in Cambodia and abroad.

Business Associate Internship Description

Project for the School of Genocide, Conflict and Human Rights Studies (the School Project) is the 26-month project to establish a certificate, BA and MA Programs on genocide, conflict and human rights in Cambodia. The School Project will be accomplished by four separate teams (Program Development, School Construction, Business Planning and Capital Campaign). The four teams will be assisted and supervised by a Project Manager and a Legal Adviser. The timeframe of the project is January 2014-December 2015.

Business Associates assigned to this project would play a critical role in the development of a business plan for the SRI's School and are expected to provide business ideas and advice on social enterprise strategies. Business Associates will carry out the following duties:

Summary of Business Plan

- Business concept, current higher education institutions, key success factors and financial situation of the current higher education institutions
- Type of the school (social enterprise), rationale, objectives, vision, mission of the school.

Market and Competitive Analyses
- Explain the benefits and contributions the school has for targeted audiences and the country at large.
- Identify the target audiences and their potential needs.
- Identify in what ways the school’s programs are of interest to the students.
- Define the strengths and weaknesses of the competitors. (Select about ten potential local universities for the study.)
- SWOT (Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities and Threats) analysis
- Key competitive strengths and weaknesses.

Marketing Strategies
- Identify marketing avenues including advertising, public relations, distribution channels, website, direct mail, etc.
- Identify other means of publicity.

Financial Projections
- Provide recommendation on the cost involving materials, supplies, equipment and services needed for the school’s functioning.
- Identify how much capital is needed to start the three programs of the school.
- Allocate the capital necessary for each program.
- Provide recommendation for the fee to be charged to students in each program.

Interested applicants should email a resume, a one-page statement of interest, and the names of two references to the School Legal Adviser Christopher Dearing at truthchristopher@dccam.org by September 20, 2013.

B. Museum of Memory
During this reporting period (July-September 2013), the team completed the following tasks:

1. Conducted Preliminary Research Trip to Provincial Museums in Battambang and Banteay Meanchey Provinces from July 8 to 13

   The research team, comprising two Museum of Memory staff (Ms. Sirik Savina and Mr. Men Pechet), two National Museum of Cambodia staff (Mr. Tes Chhoeun and Mr. Hor Kosal) and Ms. Tan Sock Keng, DC-Cam intern, travelled to Battambang Province and thereafter to Banteay Meanchey Province to conduct a preliminary research trip at respective museums, following the MOU between DC-Cam and the Ministry of Culture and Fine Arts to develop 24 provincial museums throughout Cambodia. The purpose of the trip is to install a KR history exhibition so as to generate better understanding about KR history within the local community.

   In Battambang, the team visited the Wat Po Veal museum with permission from the monk. Next, the team visited the provincial museum and held a meeting with the museum director, Mr. Kim Sophorn. A site assessment of the exhibition space was conducted. Interviews were conducted with members of the local community, including high-school students, a retired schoolteacher and villagers. The opinions of foreign visitors to the museum were also sought.
In Banteay Meanchey, the team met with the museum director, Mr. Yung Taing Kuoy, and conducted a site assessment at the provincial museum. Next, the team visited the Tepkosa-Snay archaeological site and the Trapeang Thma dam. The team also met with Mr. Siv Saruon, Head of Culture Department of Banteay Meanchey Province. Next, the team visited Wat Sopheak Mongkol and the KR memorial in the pagoda grounds, where an interview was conducted with Mr. Bin Yeun, member of the pagoda committee. Interviews with local high-school students and villagers were also conducted.

Following the research trip, the team will start to collect documents, interviews and/or photos available at DC-Cam, and exhibition materials in order to develop the exhibition content and prepare for its design.

2. Conducted Assessment of Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum and Reviewed Museum of Memory’s Exhibitions at Tuol Sleng Museum from July 25 to 26, 2013

The DC-Cam established a formal collaboration with the Ministry of Culture and Fine arts in 1996. Subsequently, DC-Cam was granted permission from the Ministry of Culture and Fine Arts to establish a project to provide educational elements and visual-audio activities to Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum through a history classroom, photo exhibitions, and film screenings.

A review of DC-Cam’s exhibitions at the Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum was conducted through site assessments of the museum and the exhibitions, visitor interviews, and analysis of visitor guestbooks. Overall, the themes explored in the five mini-exhibitions are meaningful and display curatorial coherence. However, their cohesiveness can be improved by increasing the amount of historical information about the KR regime. This will also address the unfortunate lack of contextual information in the rest of the museum complex. Other additions, such as a display of soundbites from present-day Cambodians, will enhance the contemporary relevance of the exhibits as well as symbolize hope for the future. In addition, visitor engagement with DC-Cam exhibits was compromised by the poor quality of the exhibits caused by natural damage over the years. A simple replacement of these exhibits with new full-colour prints will increase visitor interest.

It is indeed advantageous to base exhibitions at TSL on DC-Cam publications as they are well-researched, professional and aesthetically pleasing. However, it should be noted that text used in publications may be inaccessible to visitors due to complex language and visitor fatigue. Therefore, future exhibitions based on publications will do well to adjust language levels and aesthetic presentation to suit a museum environment.

After the assessment, the Museum of Memory team developed a proposal to seek funding to further strengthen and expand the Tuol Sleng Museum’s offerings to include lectures and interactive learning exhibitions. To meet these goals, the Museum of Memory intends to conduct the following activities:

a) To refurbish and revitalize existing DC-Cam exhibits at Tuol Sleng, ensuring the optimal experience for visitors
b) To install four video exhibits featuring archival footage of the Tuol Sleng prison taken in 1979. This powerful footage will allow visitors to see the reality of life in the prison as it was first exposed to the outside world before the removal of the bodies of victims.

c) To develop and install permanent exhibition on child survivors of Tuol Sleng Prison; and

d) And to provide temporary photographic exhibitions, drawing on DC-Cam’s vast photographic archives.

3. Developed Concept Paper/Proposal for New Project called “The Sleuk Roka Project” at Koh Ker Temple

As part of the Museum of Memory project in the soon-to-be-established Sleuk Rith Institute, the Museum of Memory will be working closely with APSARA Authority to develop the Koh Ker temple complex into a sustainable social enterprise. This project will help to preserve and promote the historical and cultural value of Koh Ker, as well as to support a group of Cambodian heritage experts who will take the lead in the development of Cambodia’s cultural heritage. The proposed Sleuk Roka project constitutes a preliminary cooperative venture between the Museum of Memory and APSARA Authority that embodies the broader goal of preserving and promoting Cambodia’s cultural heritage. It is hoped that this project will form the bedrock for further collaboration between the two organizations for the upcoming Koh Ker project.

The Sleuk Roka Project has four main objectives. 1) The project seeks to document existing finials at the Koh Ker temple site. Comprehensive documentation of the finials can aid in the research of these invaluable artifacts from Cambodia’s past, as there is currently little research on the cultural remnants of Koh Ker and of the finials. In addition, documentation can allow heritage experts to track the presence of the finials and to guard against theft and looting. 2) The project also seeks to preserve the finials in their existing condition. Upon initial removal from the site, under the care of conservation experts, the finials can be protected from further deterioration. 3) The project aims to educate the public, especially the local community at Koh Ker and Preah Vihear Province, about the invaluable historical and cultural value of the Koh Ker temple site and its artifacts. Having developed awareness about Koh Ker’s value, local communities can be encouraged to play their part in protecting and preserving Cambodia’s cultural heritage. 4) The project, finally, hopes to use Cambodia’s rich cultural heritage to reconcile differences among Cambodians that arose as a result of the difficult years of civil war and the KR regime. By emphasizing the shared cultural 14 Sleuk Roka refers to finials that line walls and roofs at the temple site. They typically feature elements from Hindu iconography such as the Garuda and the Naga. These images possess spiritual efficacy for the inhabitants of the site, providing protection and summoning fertility and fortune. Other elements that represent key ideas in Hinduism, such as the lotus as a symbol of purity and non-attachment, reflect the rich beliefs that guided the way of life of the people. Therefore, these Sleuk Roka provide valuable insights into the cultural and spiritual traditions of the Khmer people, particularly during the Koh Ker period. Since they still remain in situ today, the Sleuk Roka face the risk of being damaged or looted. As a national heritage site, it must be protected from the illegal trade in artifacts and preserved for future generations of Cambodians. Complexes like Koh Ker are valuable visual and architectural maps of Cambodia’s ancient past, showing us how civilizations built and maintained cities. They also provide insights on the cultural, religious and political practices of the time.

heritage among all Cambodians, the project aims to foster unity. Appreciation of Cambodia’s cultural beauty can also aid in healing among victims of the KR.

To meet these objectives, the project consists of four components:

- Creation of a database system to document information about the finials;
- Collection of finials from Koh Ker Temple site;
- Documentation of information about the finials to serve future research; and
- Exhibition of finials and publication of exhibition catalogue to educate the public about the symbolic significance of the artifacts for ancient civilizations, towards rebuilding the spiritual and cultural identity of Cambodian people.

4. Developed Museum of Memory Database and Data Entry Guide

In July 2013, Ms. Tan Sock Keng, a DC-Cam intern, assisted the Museum of Memory team to develop a Museum of Memory Database and Data Entry Guide. After consulting with many resources on database systems for museums around the world and the National Museum of Cambodia, Ms. Sock Keng has produced recommendations for the Museum of Memory database which she stated in a report. In the meantime, Ms. Sock Keng also developed a data entry guide so as to help those who would work on future data entry for the Museum of Memory database.

5. Developed Work Plan for the Development of 24 Provincial Museums

The Museum of Memory recently received generous funding from BMZ, Germany to conduct research, develop content, and install KR history exhibitions at 5 provincial museums in Battambang, Banteay Meanchey, Takeo, Kampong Thom, and Svay Rieng Province from September 2013 to December 2014. The team is now developing the work plan for these activities.

Minutes of the meeting with Mr. Hab Touch and Mr. Kong Virak on September 18, 2013

First Kunthy introduced the Museum Team to Mr. Touch and Mr. Virak. The team comprised of Bang Terith, Phalla, Belle, Narim, Kunthy, and Pechet. After that Kunthy briefed Mr. Touch and Mr. Virak on DC-Cam’s progress on the Museum of Memory Project to. The following summarizes the discussion and comments:

1) 24 Provincial Museums. DC-Cam will continue to conduct further field trips in order to install KR exhibitions at provincial museums.

Comments:

Mr. Virak received a letter from DC-Cam on the consultant position for Mr. Chhoeun and Mr. Kosal. He will discuss the work in person with Mr. Chhoeun and Mr. Kosal and will reply to DC-Cam.

Mr. Touch commented on the report submitted by the National Museum of Cambodia that DC-Cam should use one corner of Battambang Provincial Museum to install KR exhibition.
2) Policy on private museum by Barbara. DC-Cam will submit the policy paper to the National of Museum of Cambodia to review after receiving comments from DC-Cam’s advisor.
Comment: Mr. Virak looks forward to receiving the policy paper from DC-Cam.

3) Business plan for National Museum of Cambodia which DC-Cam has been completed. However DC-Cam would be happy to implement this plan once the National Museum of Cambodia needs DC-Cam.
Comment: Mr. Virak would inform DC-Cam about this.

4) Khmer Rouge exhibition in Sweden would be given to DC-Cam. DC-Cam would like to exhibit this at Tuol Sleng Genocide Museum.
Comment: Mr. Touch would be happy to have it exhibited at Tuol Sleng. However, he requested that DC-Cam submit the content of the exhibits to the Ministry of Culture and Fine Arts to review and finalize approvals.

5) Book on Tuol Sleng history. DC-Cam has completed and is in the process of editing.
Comment: Mr. Touch commented that DC-Cam submit the book to Ministry to review and finalize.

6) Ancient wooden Buddha statues at Conservation D’Angkor. DC-Cam would like to conduct exhibition and publish book on the statues.
Comment: Mr. Touch welcomed the idea. However he suggested that DC-Cam should extend its activities on providing training to Cambodian staff on how to preserve wooden objects. DC-Cam can also construct a workshop in the compound to conduct the preservation.

7) The construction of Museum of Memory in Siem Reap. DC-Cam looks forward to receiving a permission letter from the APSARA Authority to build the museum.

At Peace with the Past

A survivor of Cambodia's killing fields points the way forward for his traumatised countrymen. ➔
"Gracelace is part of my identity, and a part of me. It is important for me to embrace my past and present, instead of ignoring it. After all, the meaning of justice is defined in different ways."

"How do you even begin to bring justice to the people? I’ve never thought of that. I’d like to have the famous Khmer Rouge killers brought to justice. I’ve never seen a trial, but I believe it would be good to see them go to court."

"For the pain and suffering they had caused, it is a way to put them in a place where they can’t hurt anyone else and where they can’t hurt anyone else."

Youn, the Elephant Rouge leader, had been killed. He wanted to do something to make things right.

Youn known this too well, having been a survivor himself. He was only 15 when the Khmer Rouge came to power. Youn was forced into slave labor and was only allowed to see his siblings once. His mother was arrested and taken by the Khmer Rouge and to prove her guilt, the soldiers doused her with gasoline and set her on fire. He was too young to understand the violence, but he knew that something had happened to his hometown and that the Khmer Rouge had taken his land and forced the villagers to leave.

Read to justice

It was a long time before the Khmer Rouge cleared the area. People would sometimes visit the village, but they wouldn’t stay long. They would leave after a few hours and say they were a special group of people who wanted to help the villagers. But they never returned.

Youn knew that the Khmer Rouge were still there. He wanted to bring justice to the people who had been hurt and to make sure that the Khmer Rouge were never forgotten.

Youn has been working to bring justice to the people of Cambodia. He has been a leader in the Khmer Rouge and has helped to bring justice to the people who have been hurt by the Khmer Rouge.

Youn knows that the Khmer Rouge will never be forgotten. He wants to make sure that the people who have been hurt by the Khmer Rouge are never forgotten and that the Khmer Rouge will never be forgotten.

Custodian of Cambodia’s Past

Youk Chhang is but one of the many who lost his family and childhood to the Khmer Rouge. Today, he is an icon in the quest for memory and justice in a nation shattered by genocide.
Malaysian women to the fore

Our high-heeled warriors are among those welcomed in the workplace and consumer market. A recent study shows...

Cambodia needs heroes

HISTORY, in Cambodia know it, has been characterized by mass torture and destruction. Three and a half decades on and the effects of genocides are still very much visible in the nation's social and physical landscape. These remain along process of normalization before the nation can put the past behind.

That is why social activists like Youl Chhang play such an important role in researching and preserving the facts of the Khmer Rouge genocide. In telling the story of the massacre, he allows the victims to deal with the trauma in their own private space. He believes that closure will come differently to each individual.

But reconciliation does not end with just the memory of what transpired. Genocide warrants justice. And Chhang is committed to pursuing it. Through the Documentation Centre of Cambodia (DC-Cam), an NGO with the task of preserving the facts of the genocide, he has supported a Cambodian tribunal's efforts to put those responsible for the killing Friday behind bars.

The legal process against those charged includes unprecedented (journey through the witness chambers of courthouses and careful steering to avoid the impacts of bellicose interference. The biggest worry faceted by those who seek justice for the victims is that it may not arrive in time.

Nevertheless to say the truth of the Khmer Rouge leaders, facing a gravity trial meant and torture charges, are ongoing. There have been five charged with crimes against humanity. So far, only one has been successfully convicted, while another has been released (owing to her being deemed unfit to stand trial. As they review progress, the public and acceptance to the remain calm that may be able to exist one before the statement is done.

Chhang and DC-Cam are not alone in their quest for justice. They have received the support of the victims and the recognition of the international community. Accolades have piled up for Chhang, and he has been named one of Time Magazine's 100 Most Influential People in Asia. He says: "We cannot but be nonchalant of the efforts and a mission to achieve our little, hoping to mark history like coming from his own family. In at least, the remaining few who survived, they feel blessed. My heart was just five years old when my mother was brutally murdered. I cannot understand the need to preserve the memory of the past."

Chhang is on a mission, a mission for his own salvation. He says, "I have lived and felt the emotional and physical pain of the present. I am a Cambodian who has lived through it."

Custodian of Cambodia’s past

Yok Chhang is but one of the many who lost his family and childhood to the Khmer Rouge. Today, he is an icon in the quest for memory and justice in a nation shattered by genocide.

After the fall of the Khmer Rouge’s regime, memory involves initiatives to reconstruct Cambodian and the world about the events that transpired during the years 1975 to 1979. The Cambodian government has recognized DC-Cam’s role in this important institution of civil rehabilitation, and recently granted 4,800 sq. m of land in the center to build a permanent site of operations. Called the Sheldon Trust Institute, it is named after the deceased father, a counsellor at DC-Cam who has devoted himself to the development and cultural heritage.

The success of DC-Cam’s initiatives are necessary to allow the country and social disorder that are a legacy of the Khmer Rouge. No stranger to trauma, Chhanghthus returns to the days of April 17, 1975 to June 9, 1979 when the mass of the regiments in the thousands of Phnom Penh in its former life, the Vietnamese People’s Army. His role of revealing the truth includes not only the memory, but also the present as a learning point for the future.

In his role as the director of the Documentation Centre of Cambodia (DC-Cam), he hopes that the centres of documentation will become a national museum.

for country, and possessing is the only path to forgiveness.

The idea of this tribunal is to establish trust in the legal system, the rule of law, a foundation so that each of us can feel our own definition of justice. After genocide, on one can communicate justice will never be possible.

With the passing over of the era, the efforts of these years have been a difficult task. Getting the truth and the voices of the survivors of Cambodia’s worst ever justice will not be possible.

Perhaps not entirely surprising, Chheng reported that justice has always been very difficult for the non-governmental organizations to work with. Getting the truth and the voices of the survivors of Cambodia’s worst ever justice will not be possible.

Award-winning director will show her work county-wide

In A River Changes Course, Khmer-American filmmaker Kayanee Mam showed with spectacular imagery and intimate real-life characters, how the Kingdom is changing with the tide of rapid development. This week she returns to Cambodia in the immediate lead-up to the election, still hoping the film’s impact will make voters think about the country’s bigger picture.

Award-winning director will show her work county-wide

Rosa Ellen

Few views are as poignantly emotive as the descending landscape of home, from the bird-eye’s view of an airplane. When Kayanee Mam returned to Cambodia in 1998 as a 21-year-old, it was her first time back in the country since fleeing to the United States with her family as a child. The beauty of the landscape ‘moved’ her.

When she next visited years had gone by and the view from the plane was quite different. Mam too had changed; she had a law degree and was working as a lawyer uninvolved with Yale University’s Cambodian genocide program. Travelling and interviewing villagers with the program’s Documentation Center of Cambodia (DC-Cam), she began to hear first-hand the new problems faced by survivors of the Khmer Rouge of today’s land, environmental destruction and the economic toll of rapid agro-industrialisation on farmers.

This year’s 36-year-old documentary film A River Changes Course, a rich and stunning visual portrait of three Cambodians whose lives are changing as a consequence of development, won the Sundance Film Festival’s World Lumma Grand Jury Prize. This decision was the first-time a foreigner returned to the Kingdom to front screening of her film to universities and villages in the hope of fostering discussions around Cambodia’s future into the minds of voters.

“I think people are talking about specific things (in the election) like deportations — a lot of NGOs are fighting the land grabbing and a lot of human rights organisations are helping to open the discussion about the issues presented in the film.

But the conversation is larger than that. It’s not just about land rights or detention or eviction or factory workers’ rights, it’s about the future of the country and what we want for our children. What we should want is a country where people have dignity and connection to their land, people are able to live a dignified life. That’s what the movie is about.

Like the airbone view that welcomed Mam in her first trip home, the film offers a striking perspective on Cambodia’s environmental crisis. From the sacred forests of Battambang, where luminary Siem Reap, a son of Cambodia’s environmental movement, was arrested, to the lush forests of Kampong Thom, where Lao women’s associations are fighting for their land and way of life, the film offers a rich portrait of the struggle for survival.

The film is a visual feast, and engaging interview — the long-form lawyer to DC-Cam researcher of the Khmer Rouge; cinematographer and director of A River Changes Course, was not just as part of it sounds.

She regards herself as a storyteller and a filmmaker, not just as a lawyer — who in Cambodia is often seen as a person among many. She was always interested in telling stories, and her passion for photography led her to filmmaking.

‘What we should want is a country where people have dignity and connection to their land.’

A river changes course, and so does life. Our interviewer then considered the idea of what she could say until she asked: “What do you think people will say if you considered yourself more a storyteller than a lawyer — that could have inspired you more confidence.”

She laughed. “We’re all here to tell stories. I was a lawyer in the past, but now I’m a storyteller.”
When we screened the film to Koh Kong and Siem Reap last year, I asked people to raise their hands if they had ever been to Kampong Cham or Battambang. No one raised their hand. Very few people living in different parts of the community have the opportunity to travel to different places in the country which also means they may not be sure what is happening to them is also happening all over Cambodia, she says. Rather than point fingers at the blame on politicians and corruption, the film aims to get people thinking about the bigger issue of Cambodia’s overall industrial development, says the film’s executive producer Youk Chhang, of DC-Cam.

The idea was to see the beauty of the countryside to engage the audience – Kampong Cham is very natural at heart. It was still a small village and the area was originally founded on land tenure because of a River Changes Course. The film needed the economic and social transformation of the place, where people were working in fields and rice factories, where they were fishing in the water, there’s a dwindling fish population. Where there’s running water there are dams being built, where there’s former rice fields there are rubber plantations and sugar. It hit two years ago people were struggling for survival. Right now people are struggling to not only survive but maintain their dignity.

A fellow Man Phar says that she has no surprise – but rather lives to learn and be open-minded and to celebrate and discover – a pessimistic optimism influences her conversation about the film she lovingly promotes. “When you work on the village level for a while, you burn out. It’s such a difficult topic and there’s only so much you can hear about. Every encounter, the psychological effects of one season to the next – how the other way I felt that while we were taking about the past, so much is happening in the present.”

Interview with Youk Chhang for the Austrian weekly magazine "Die Furche"

Question: Elections on July 28. A demonstration was organized in Phnom Penh with a survivor of the Khmer Rouge Regime. It seems that the ruling Peoples Party shows interest to remind Cambodians of their past. Is this content (only) an election campaign theme? And what is your opinion to this issue?

Youk Chhang: The past is not just an election theme, it is an ongoing national theme that is often inappropriately politicized by all political parties. While it is important for Cambodians to remember the past, and we carry a solemn oath to educate the younger generation about what happened and why, we must not allow the past to frame our present. Survivors lived a genocide already, and it is not right to remind them of it year after year to validate a vision or legitimize a political order. It is also unfair for anyone to assume that one party, government, or group can save a country. Countries are saved by the sacrifice, hope, and resilience of many actors and one should recognize the danger of identifying a single party, government, or group as the sole basis for a society’s post-conflict prosperity and peace. Cambodians are a gentle people that are accustomed to paying respect, homage, and gratitude to people who help them. For this reason alone, we should devote our energy to supporting policies not people, and institutional processes, not parties—because it is policies and processes that guarantee a society’s future. Leaders cannot lead forever and all political parties carry the seeds of ideological solipsism. The search for the truth should never be politicized and victims deserve to have a sense of closure. This is why I support the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC or known as the Khmer Rouge Tribunal) —because it may be one of the most important instruments for achieving this sense of closure for victims.

Question: Do politicians in common tend to refer to the past or don’t they? Could this be a chance to work through the past and learn to cope with traumatic experiences?

Youk Chhang: It is common for politicians to refer to the past, if not directly then at least by suggestion. Indeed, politics and history are interconnected, because to have a conversation about one inevitably requires an interpretation of the other. But references to the past do not have to always emphasize partisanship or division. We can also use the past to unify a people and stimulate the processes that can make distant visions seem possible and clear. History must be the starting point for all post-conflict society rebuilding and it is necessary for politicians to refer to the past as part of their vision. Indeed, a society can hardly solve the problems of today if it cannot even have a candid discussion on the problems of the past. But the past is only one piece of the transitional justice puzzle and countries must not see themselves as victims forever.

Trauma is certainly a shadow on post-conflict societies. Indeed, it causes many post-conflict societies to see the world in black and white. It is common to see countries sway between anger and hopelessness, and vengeance and disengagement. It is for this reason that we can say that one of the most difficult problems of all post-conflict societies is the simple issue of balance. It is hard for victims to see past the recent trauma of seeing loved ones killed and for perpetrators there is an undying sense of shame and or in some cases utter delusion for being so far removed from humanity. And this is where process-oriented outcomes is the key ingredient. Dialogue, education, and an ever-evolving outlook that is forward-leaning must balance our instinctual urge to see the world in black and white.

Question: In Cambodia of today: Are people still on power, politically or economically who played roles in the Khmer Rouge regime? If yes, how do you and Cambodians feel about it? (I am asking this, because it was a big issue in Austria and Germany after WWII. Some judges, medical doctors, scientists and politicians managed to camouflage their past and: the new government needed experts.)

Youk Chhang: Cambodia is no different than any other post-conflict country in the sense that there are former Khmer Rouge in all areas of society, from government and NGO, to religious institutions and common citizens. Cambodians are well aware of this and it is for this reason that it is imperative to have some closure to the justice process. By bringing a sense of justice to victims, the Khmer Rouge Tribunal will help provide some closure to this horrible history and allow society to move forward.

Question: Your independent search for the truth stands under the slogan “memory and justice”. Some people tend – for many reasons – to fade out traumatic experiences. Is there something that could be called the art of forgetting? And how do you feel about it?

Youk Chhang: The proper word would be a science of forgetting because there is no art to this process. While the wounds may be mental, they are no less connected to the world of scientific diagnoses and treatment. My search for the truth is based on the slogan memory and justice, which are concepts that are predicated on dynamic healing processes. Memory refers to education and justice refers to research. Memory must never be static; rather it must reflect a constant process of teaching what we know about the history to the next generation so that the history is never forgotten. Education becomes a process of ensuring that those who died did not die in vain and those who survived are honored and respected. Justice cannot be achieved without research and so this is why the concept is predicated on the unending effort to expand our understanding of what happened and why. Long after legal decisions are rendered, justice can be achieved through unending research into the history, which brings light to the inhumanity and provides greater meaning to those who suffered.

Question: In Austria – even so many years after WWII, the Nazi-cruelties are still a matter of concern. Many people are aware of our past. Have you heard of Simon Wiesenthal, founder and director of the Austrian documentation center of Nazi-crimes?
Youk Chhang: I never heard of Simon Wisenthal until 1998. I was introduced to his writings and experience by a Dutch official in Bangkok (Ambassador Laetitia vanden Assum) and shortly thereafter I read up on his biography and work. In terms of our lives however, while there may have been parallels between our backgrounds, we emerged from two different worlds. Simon Wisenthal suffered as an adult during the Nazi regime, and I was a mere boy (aged 13) during Democratic Kampuchea.

Question: Like you, Simon Wiesenthal has been a victim. He survived Nazi terror and concentration camps and after the war he helped to bring many offenders to jail. His motto was: justice, not hate. Does this motto sound familiar to you and would it work for Cambodia?

Youk Chhang: Yes, justice is absolutely the most important aspect and hatred is always the wrong answer.

Question: Can these systems (Nazi and Khmer Rouge) be compared?

Youk Chhang: They are beyond comparison. One should never compare historical periods, regimes, or mass atrocities because the mere process of comparison carries the same tones of categorization that such mass atrocities were based upon. It is impossible to compare one’s suffering with another person’s and at a national level one this holds the same.

Question: You are co-editor of “Cambodia’s Hidden Scars”. Should people be encouraged to show their scars, both their physical scars and those in their souls? And could this sometimes become a second torture? I would like to learn more about pros and cons of the “hidden scars” philosophy.

Youk Chhang: We never encourage individuals to speak out in our programs. The critical need in post-conflict societies is to create the opportunities for individuals to engage in different processes for healing, but ultimately it must be their choice on how to confront their scars and when. Many people are encouraged to get involved in our programs because they find closure in the act of speaking about their experiences. But there are others who also wish to just listen quietly and think. Some people wish to go to the ECCC to see the trial of the accused, while others are comforted by the fact that they know how or where their loved one died. The act of healing can take many forms and the critical task is not to encourage people to specific processes or activities, but merely provide the opportunity and let them decide. Encouraging people to one process or activity, or asking people to get involved is not only inappropriate but it is dehumanizing, because it carries the air of superiority. I often say that a film cannot truly film genocide; a book cannot really capture the experience of genocide; and no single process of healing, closure or education can address the trauma that was rendered on the soul of a human being. We mislead ourselves if we think we can really translate the genocidal experience into a single medium or the healing process into a single instrument or activity. It is in this sense that people who suffer from trauma do not need to be told what is the best way to heal and our mission has always been defined by this ethos.
Question: How do people in Cambodia deal with reconciliation and forgiving? Is it really possible? In post-Apartheid-South Africa this movement was mainly carried by Christian-religious believes.

Youk Chhang: People in Cambodia approach reconciliation and forgiving in far different ways than other societies. Subtle acts of kindness, generosity, and respect are the common ways that perpetrators today seek to communicate their desire for forgiveness to victims. I know of one example where a well-known former Khmer Rouge cadre (and perpetrator) would often bring water to a victim and offer subtle, but often deeply-sincere gestures of kindness. To a foreigner, these subtle acts of kindness would barely seem notable but between the victim and perpetrator they are symbolic acts of apology, and the victim’s acceptance, in turn, signify a sense of forgiveness.

Religion is a commonly cited part of Cambodia’s struggle to achieve reconciliation and forgiveness, but it is important that we also recognize the vast spectrum of other pieces to this struggle. Between 1979 and 1984, acts of vengeance were perpetrated on Khmer Rouge who still remained in Cambodia, and while these acts slowly dissipated, we would be mindful to note that the animosity against perpetrators has not disappeared. In many communities today, victims live side-by-side with perpetrators. There are some communities where a victim even knows who killed his or her loved ones, so what prevents them from committing the same act on the perpetrator? While some have often claimed it is the Buddhism, I believe this is only one piece. Improvements in one’s economic circumstances and an overall interest in a peaceful community serve as powerful incentives to simply forgive the perpetrators. In addition, it is hard when one is raising one’s family while harboring hatred and when one sees and communicates with the children and grandchildren of perpetrators, the urge for vengeance weakens. In sum, religion is an important aspect to Cambodia and all societies but economic prosperity, community stability, and the love of one’s family and hope for the future serve as powerful pieces of the process of forgiveness.

Question: Is religion in Cambodia a theme concerning dealing with the historic past in order to help people? Religion is always suppressed under communistic regimes.

Youk Chhang: People try to use religion for example in trauma treatment because it is a way of life and it holds many important values for guiding the resolution of conflict. However, religion is not the main theme in Cambodia. Development is more important. Since 1979, more than 4,000 Buddisth pagodas, over 300 mosques, and a variety of Christian denominations were established, yet Cambodians still have problems.

Question: How about revenge? I can imagine that forgiving is not easy at all. If my neighbor tortured or killed one of my family members it is hard not to think of revenge. I guess you lived to see many cases like this.

Youk Chhang: Between 1979 and 1984, there were many acts of revenge by victims on former Khmer Rouge. Victims identified all Khmer Rouge as evil and so random acts of violence (as well as targeted acts) were perpetrated throughout the country. Many Khmer Rouge fled the country to Thailand or other countries, only to return as a political force with renewed energy, but the same mentality. But time proved to be the ultimate ingrediant to the cycle of violence. Over time, victims had second thoughts about their urge to avenge loved ones. As victims and perpetrators settled into a sense of a normal life, and family life took over, the urge to take action against former Khmer Rouge dissipated. But even if victims and perpetrators moved on with new lives, the lack of closure to their old life continues to harbor problems today, both in terms of post-traumatic stress as well as animosity, anger, and mistrust. This is why still today, despite the many problems at the ECCC, about 80 percent of Cambodians support the justice process at the ECCC.

Question: You survived situations, unthinkable for most of us. How did you personally manage feelings like revenge, if I may ask?

Youk Chhang: In 2007 I published a piece A Thief of History, in which I described my encounter with young thief who attempted to break into my apartment. He was a small boy, no more than 12 or 14. I chased him and as he attempted to climb down from the terrace I caught his hand. As I stood there, gripping his bony hand, part of my past flashed across my mind. It was a memory from the Pol Pot time, when as a city kid, I was forced to live in the countryside, like many other millions of city dwellers. I did not have many survival skills, but hunger drives you to learn quickly. For example, I taught myself how to swim, so that I could dive down and cut the sweet sugarcane growing in the flooded rice fields. And I learnt how to steal food, how to kill and eat snakes and rats, and how to find edible leaves in the jungle. When I caught his hand, the small thief triggered memories of how much I suffered under the Khmer Rouge, and it made me think too about why he was trying to break into my apartment. Perhaps he was hungry. I saw myself in his hungry face.

It is understandable for people to have feelings of anger over what happened during the DK regime, but coming face-to-face with former perpetrators (like this little boy) you cannot remove yourself from their humanity.

Question: Coming back to the example of Simon Wiesenthal, he was sometimes accused for his survival. (Mainly by people who disliked his search for the truth) People said, only collaborators could survive concentration camps. Did ever people raise such a topic against you? I can imagine how painful such an accusation must be.

Youk Chhang: People never did accuse me because perhaps I was a child during the DK regime (about 13 years old). People today do not always agree with what I do, but I stand by what I do because I want everyone to find their own personal truth and meaning in this history. The process of finding memory and justice is a national process that must be personalized by each and every person in Cambodia.

Question: Today’s younger generation of Cambodia: How do they learn about their history and how active is your documentation center in educational work?

Youk Chhang: Today’s younger generation primarily learns history at home and through their teacher. While Cambodia has made incredible strides in public education, the home still remains a critical source for information about the past. Documentation Center of Cambodia (DC-Cam) actively engages these institutions through its genocide education program in which it partners with the Ministry of Education, Youth and Sport to support a nation-wide curriculum on the history of Democratic Kampuchea. In addition to public schools, DC-Cam is active in promoting genocide education through public education forums, newsletters, magazines, and radio. Through a variety of media, DC-Cam is ensuring genocide education is taught in every home, school, and community.

Question: Please, I would appreciate, if you could add some sentences that you would like to say about you and your work.

Youk Chhang: My story is not important. My mother and I were fortunate to have survived the Khmer Rouge period. We have better food to eat today and a better life and I find personal fulfillment and meaning in meeting so many survivors, many of whom still suffer in poverty, mental health problems, and debilitating injuries. My work is to represent them not my story.

DC-Cam to Help Burma Record Rights Abuses

Thai Ex-Minister in Trouble Over Preah Vihear

By Simon Lewis

A former Thai foreign minister is facing misconduct charges, as a statement he signed with Cambodian Deputy Prime Minister Sok Saikari regarding the Preah Vihear temple, according to a Thai newspaper report.

Noppon Pattara—one of the advisers to disengaged former Thai Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra, and who was foreign minister for five months in 2008—signed off on a joint letter to Mr. Prasith Norith, the president of the Preah Vihear International World Heritage Site.

Noppon for misconduct.

The report says Mr. Noppon is currently free on bail but has denied the allegations, claiming that the agreement with Cambodia did not affect Thai land. He has since been charged with human rights violations, and Mr. Panyi, adding that the Cambodian center's expertise in compiling and understanding documents and evidence would be helpful in assisting ND-Burma.

"The project aims to provide a basis for the government to provide reparations, especially to those with urgent needs," Mr. Han Gyo said. "In the long term, the aim is to present serious human rights violations."

Because many members of the current government are from the previous regime, the word "truth-seeking" or "truth commission" in the rein of DC-Cam would be considered threatening, Mr. Han Gyo said. "It is why I support it, as an unofficial project."

After decades of military rule, Burma is opening up, introducing reforms such as free elections, increased press freedom and the release of some political prisoners. However, human rights violations still persist in the country, most recently due to the growing polarization between Buddhists and Muslim Moors. In the past year, more than 100 people have been killed in religious clashes, and more than 150,000 have been displaced—mainly Muslims known as the Rohingyas.

Mr. Choa said yesterday that ND-Burma would be sending some members to Cambodia on August 11 for about two months to learn documentation techniques.

"For us, it is fortunate to have the chance to guide them through the political remit of a project of this sort, caught between the sometimes polar opposites of ensuring that historical records are preserved in their entirety and maintaining a sufficiently positive relationship with both the government and the background players which inevitably will include key remnants of the regime," he said.

Gambler Fleecing Loan Sharks Jumps out Window

By Aun Phita

Svy Rieng Provincial Court charged (two Vietnamese nationals with illegal detention on Saturday after a man they had detained at a Battambang City casino for five days jumped from a second-floor window in an apparent suicide attempt, officials said yesterday.

Nguyen Van Kien, 39, and Vinh Van Hai, 29, allegedly held the man in a room in a casino for five daysafter the victim had borrowed $2,500 from the two suspects, both of whom were managers at New World Casino. That night, the victim's, or "luon ban," said he was held captive at the casino. "The two Vietnamese nationals held him in a room in a casino for five days and beat him up," Mr. Phint Phirun said. "On Monday morning, he jumped from the second floor to the ground where he was detained."

"He was sent to Cambodia immediately for medical treatment because his legs were broken after he attempted to commit suicide because he was too worried about losing the money," Mr. Phint Phirun said.

The two men were sent to court yesterday, said Battambang police chief Kao Houng, adding that the police are still investigating the case to find out if other staff from the casino had been involved in the detention and torture.

There have been numerous reports of foreigners being arrested in Battambang City being illegally detained and tortured in the area's border casinos by black-market loan sharks.

In July, the Court of Appeal upheld a verdict sentencing a Vietnamese loan shark to five years in prison for illegal debt collection and cutting a finger off a 14-year-old man before he was rescued.
Garment workers see lives reflected on the big screen

Garment worker Elina Mok, left, with film director Elan Chin, one of the four main subjects of her documentary A River Changes Course.

The three-minute footage captured last week by Mok, who has been making her documentary about the lives of garment workers in Phnom Penh, has been released as a short film to accompany her feature-length documentary, which will be screened at a film festival in the country next month.

The film captures the lives of four workers, including Mok and Cheng Pei, who have been working in the garment industry for more than a year.

The documentary follows the stories of Mok, who was born in Phnom Penh and works as a tailor, and Cheng Pei, who was born in a rural village in Cambodia.

The film was shot over a period of four months and was produced in collaboration with the garment workers who appeared in it.

The documentary also features interviews with other garment workers and their families, offering a glimpse into their daily lives.

The film was premiered at the 2018 Cambodia International Film Festival and has since been shown at various film festivals around the world.

Rumour, hearsay and conflict

Opinion

La Van Hauing

Depite ‘rumour or hearsay’ of social instability in Cambodian society, the National Election Committee (NEC) decided to proceed with its first provisional announcement of the electoral results yesterday. The NEC's decision has been met with mixed reactions, with some lauding its transparency and others expressing concerns about the potential for misinformation.

The NEC's announcement has sparked a wave of concern, particularly in the context of recent democratic setbacks in the region. Rumours and hearsay have proliferated on social media, further complicating the situation. The authorities have advised the public to verify information from reliable sources to avoid being misled.

Cambodia: People first. The NEC's decision was widely praised for its transparency and openness. However, there have been concerns about the potential for misinformation.

Documentation Helps Raise Human Rights Awareness in Asia

The film helped raise awareness because what they saw was not what they thought to exist. They felt that their investments were somehow better off than others. This has raised awareness and led to changes in policy. The film has been shown in countries all over the world. The film also aims to encourage those who work to protect their own interests, to demand their own rights and defend their own futures.

As for the pressure, no one has threatened me. But people have threatened me with legal action. I think the film has been successful in raising awareness and encouraging people to take action. The film has helped to educate people about the issues at hand and to encourage them to think critically about human rights.

How do you handle pressure to speak out? I try to speak out in a constructive way, focusing on solutions and strategies for change. The film has helped to raise awareness and encourage people to take action. I think the film has been successful in educating people about the issues at hand and in encouraging them to think critically about human rights. I believe that speaking out is important for creating a better world for all.

How much freedom have you had from the government, we know that PM Hun Sen was once part of the Khmer Rouge?

One hundred percent freedom, as for them, we have his file too. The reason why I said 100 percent is because the DC-CAM is not a court. We have our own objectives. The issue is justice. As for the Tribunal, the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC) the government has seemed very open. One reason why the government supported the court is that they also perceive themselves as victims of the Khmer Rouge regime. Our research is actually seen by them as a benefit to them.

There were only two countries in the world supporting this process when it started. One was Cambodia because they saw it as a benefit to politics. Second, the United States government, because the US was under pressure to look into the crimes carried out by the Khmer Rouge. Before that, people never looked at these crimes as human rights violations. Others around the world also felt like genocide was a very sensitive issue. When people looked at World War II, they left the Holocaust very complicated. But later we got support from European countries like the Netherlands, Sweden, Denmark, etc.

As now we have international support, it's up to Cambodia to make the difference and to change course. And we are changing course now in terms of Khmer Rouge history.

What if people wish to avoid facing real and painful memories? How does the Khmer Rouge know it’s happening even after it really worked?

If people don’t want to talk about their experiences, you should respect that it’s part of the documentation process. We have no right to tell people to forget, to apologize. We should respect people’s choices about how they want to live their lives. Healing is either personal thing for [some] survivors.

Only about ten of fifteen per cent of victims wish to keep their experiences secret, according to regular surveys which have been conducted nationwide, not only by us, but also by other international institutions. We carry out surveys every two or three years. Usually 85-87 percent of victims support the process of documentation and justice. Most survivors want their children to learn and to know about their experiences of crisis. We also encourage students to get involved as part of the process of healing by interviewing their parents and neighbors. This work by students has been integrated into high school curriculum nationwide. It’s very personal and it helps healing. I think parents want to talk to their children more about what happened. I think most parents feel very appreciated if their children want to know their life experiences and part of it because it’s important.

Before the first-ever Khmer Rouge History was integrated into the textbooks in 2000, how did the generation born after the “Killing Fields” era perceive their time?

Define that, the content in the textbook was true about politics, not even about history. After students read the new 25-page introduction to the history of the Khmer Rouge, they had many questions—including about the external causes of the Khmer Rouge, beliefs in previous lives, and about coup details and the Vietnam War. The problem was that the teachers did not have the ability to answer all the questions. So we tried to answer the common questions from a total of 400 frequently asked questions nationwide, and we provided materials for history teachers to help them answer the questions and deal with the issues.

There is also a challenge with regards to Khmer Rouge parents. Most of those parents don’t talk about their children. We learned that in Phnom Penh, one student told a teacher, “you don’t need to teach me because I know my parents are Khmer Rouge.” The children became a bit aggressive rather than challenging for the truth, and the teachers had less time to explain. Currently, Cambodia is still facing challenges like this. It is not an easy process. But Cambodia needs to face this. So we have many different formal and informal programs with institutions, and we air issues on TV and in media like magazines and other publications. You could call it a huge education program.
I think there is a lack of understanding about human rights in Southeast Asia. There are also many conflicts around domestic politics and policies in Asian countries. How do you teach people about peace? It’s actually about human rights and we are very open. In addition, there are 4-year agreements with the government (starting from 2009) to operate in the South East Institute. We have been supported by the International Association of Genocide Scholars as a hub in Asia on genocide study and we are part of that network.

How do you think awareness of human rights can be enhanced in Asia?

It’s very hard. In the past, you could see many Asians close to study subjects such as accounting, banking, engineering, or food. Anyway, now it’s somewhat different. Studying human rights is not something that many young Asians would like to do. And we think it is very important to travel between ASEAN countries and to see more of the growing number of ASEAN students.

There are also different groups. People in post-conflict countries like Syria, Iraq, Myanmar, East Timor, and so forth are interested in history. In stable countries like Thailand and others, people are more interested in courses and scholarships for documentation. But in all countries, interest in the study of human rights and genocide is rising.

What are your expectations around cooperation between public intellectuals in Asia?

In the media sector, some journalists in ASEAN could be experts in the topic of genocide and human rights. In academic, genocide should be studied within formal programs. Scholarships provided to young scholars in Asia would be one way to enable them to go back to their countries and teach and integrate the issues in the fields of sociology, history, geography, politics, etc. In the near future, there should be more cooperation between ASEAN countries and international organizations.

In access to the ASEAN Community (2015), I think we have a good understanding of the principles of human rights. It would be a failure to only integrate in terms of economy and the English language. For example, we should be proud of speaking more than English, or this is the principle concept of human rights. ASEAN youth populations have to understand human rights because they will become leaders of the region. If ASEAN wants to compete with the European Union or others around the world, each of our countries needs to face challenges and visions. In order to survive, it will take time, but we can do it. We are not blind and we will have learn. We have technology. There are also opportunities. One day we will have a good ASEAN community.

Political Will Lacking as Much as KRT Funding

The government yesterday defended its position not to fulfill financial obligations to the Khmer Rouge war crimes tribunal, where about 200 local staff are striking over months of unpaid wages, and denied it has broken any agreement with the U.N.

Legal experts, however, said that by shifting its responsibilities to the war crimes court, the government was in breach of previous U.N. agreements and at risk of reinforcing the perception that it does not support the bequest of courts mandated to prosecute former officials of the Pol Pot regime.

"The government has no more budget available for the national side of the ECCC (Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia)," said Ek Tha, a government spokesperson with the Council of Ministers' Press and Quick Reaction Unit.

"We haven't broken any agreement with the U.N. in the sense that we had contributed in the past to the national side of the court, and we have the right to seek support from donors outside of Cambodia," he continued, adding that the government has already contributed about $169 million, in-kind and cash, toward the court and simply cannot afford to contribute more. According to the ECCs website, the government's costs

Israel, Saudi Arabia Press Obama to Strike Syria

Israel's response to Obama's surprise move to delay or even possibly cancel airstrikes made clear that connection. Looking soft on Assad after accusing him of killing hundreds of people with chemical weapons may embolden his backers in Tehran to develop nuclear arms, Israeli officials said. And if they do, Israel may strike Iran alone, assuming if Washington can't be trusted.

Neither U.S. ally is picking a fight with Obama in public. Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said on Sunday that the nation was "bemused and self-confident." Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal simply renewed a call to the "international community" to halt Assad's violence in Syria.

But the Saudi monarchy, though lacking Israel's readiness to attack Iran, can share the Jewish state's concern that neither may now look with confidence to Washington to curb what Riyadh sees as a drive by its Persian rival to dominate the Arab world.

Last year, Obama assured Israelis

Alaskan Real Cabbage Patch Kid

RELIEFS

PALMER, Alaska - A 10-year-old boy has won Alaska’s annual giant cabbage contest of the Fourth Quarter, as 41.9 lb. specimen named “Boob” to officials at the state fair.

Reuben Eells of Wasilla, Alaska, produced this year’s winning entry, which was carried in by several boys Scouts, in the Alaska State Fair Giant Cabbage Weigh-Off Friday night. His giant cabbage, which rose to about thigh height on a typical adult, and of whose contestants were weighed at the fairgrounds in Palmer, in a contest varied by hundreds of ounces.

attended by green-clad women dressed as “cabbage fairies.”

Produce can grow to enormous sizes in Alaska, such as state’s annual giant cabbage contest.

This year’s giant cabbage is a tradition in this part of the state, north of Anchorage, which is considered the Alaskan main farm belt.

This year’s potential state-champion pumpkin, a 234.6 lb. specimen named “Three Bones,” was grown by H.J. Marchelsen of Nikiski, who was disquised because of a hole, violating rules calling for vegetables to be structurally intact. Absent the hole, it would have just beaten the Alaskan pumpkin record of 368.8 lb.

Funding...

A contribution has amounted to some $4.8 million. Although the government has said the war crimes court began operating seven years ago, with reliance on local foreign funding to cover its financial responsibility to provide the necessary funds.

In 2009, a year after the start of the court, the trial has entered a period of strike over three months of unpaid wages—the second time this year action had been taken.

“Cambodia is a poor country. We have a lot of things to focus on. We also have to focus on rebuilding our country, from education to health care to rural development and agriculture. I am quite positive that donors and citizens of the ECCC will not let the court down,” Mr. Tan continued.

Mr. Tan said that Deputy Prime Minister Sok Khemara, who had the Japanese and Chinese ambassadors to Cambodia in separate meetings today, sent an effort to solicit donations to the national side of the court, part of a wider fundraising appeal in which the representatives of the government and U.N. toured five Asian countries last month seeking donations.

The Khmer Rouge tribunal has so far delivered just one verdict—a life sentence for former S-21 prison chief Duch in Case 001. Currently, due to the drawn-out legal process and the old age of the defendants, just two of four senior regime leaders originally

The government has never been expected to fund the trial, but there is public pressure for the court to continue.

This year, David Scheffer, the U.N.’s special expert to the tribunal, called on the government to fulfill its obligation to the court.

“We are working with the Royal Government of Cambodia, which has the legal obligation to cover national salaries, and with foreign donors to resolve this problem,” he said in an email.

Mr. Scheffer added that the suggestions that donors were reticent to give money to the national side of the court due to previous allegations of government interference and corruption were “false.”

“Old allegations of political interference and corruption have nothing discernable to do with the current financial difficulties. Donors’ funds are not set in support to covering the Cambodian legal obligation and is more related to post-recession belt tightening by foreign donors than to the stale allegations,” he said.

The Cambodia government must ensure that the national side of the court continues to function if it hopes to maintain credibility internationally, said Luis Mariano, a law professor and independent political analyst.

“It is not a question of political will. The government has certain duties according to law and under agreements with U.N., and we have to honor our obligations,” he said.

“[Government leaders have been dragging their feet all along. First trying not to create the tribunal, then after the creation, our prime minister has been keen to see through the whole process,” he added.

Youk Chhang, director of the Documentation Center of Cambodia, said that without the support and confidence of the Cambodian public, the court could not expect to receive continued international sympathy.

“The expectation of the ECCC, especially it was high, has been damaged,” he said, citing the death of former Khmer Rouge Foreign Minister Ieng Sary earlier this year and the decision in 2012 that his wife, the regime’s former Social Affairs Minister Ieng Thirith, was unfit to stand for trials that have “driven people away from the tribunal.”

“When you can bring back support from people, it will bring confidence to international community to try to make it work. We are here for the public; we are here for the people; we are here for the project of the ECCC,” he said.

Helen Jarvis, a long-time advisor to Mr. An, who previously advised the government during the creation of the ECCC, said that both the U.N. and the government have always relied on donor funding to keep their side of the court operating, and that fatigue has set in due to the prolonged legal proceedings.

“The agreement (to form the court) stipulates that the U.N. should pay for international side, and the government should pay for the national side, but neither the U.N. nor the government has paid for their side of the budget. Both sides have relied on voluntary donations,” Ms. Jarvis said.

“I think everybody is concerned that the process is taking much longer than ever anticipated. This is the biggest problem. We are now seven years into the process, which was originally projected for three years. This is a huge problem, both financially and because of the age of accused and the victims,” she said.

Myanmar to follow Cambodia’s lead in documenting recent history
Myanmar to follow Cambodia’s lead in documenting recent history

Myanmar is in the process of setting up a documentation centre to reflect on decades of human rights abuses, it’s using the records of Tuol Sleng prison as inspiration.

POPPY MCMHORSON

Myanmar’s new第三代 has started on Tuol Sleng last month, the cramped cells and bloodstained walls are eerily familiar. It looked just like ‘K while we were here, my friend Ral was suffering, we didn’t have the time to see these horrible things.

During his month-long stay in Cambodia, which ended on Wednesday, 30-year-old Khin Min Lay examined video footage to Tuol Sleng genocide museum in Phnom Penh. In the prison the Khmer Rouge called S-21, about 14,000 men, women and children were tortured and then executed.

He talked with Chao Mey, one of a handful of survivors known as S-21 survivors. She is 82 years old and one of two female survivors to return to the place they were detained to tell their story, take pictures and talk to visitors.

Khin Min Lay was transferred to Taiping in Myanmar, he was detained for 12 years, and then released after a period of rehabilitation. He said that he always dreamed of visiting Cambodia to learn about the Khmer Rouge regime.

One of the goals of the organisation, which since is to create a documentation centre to serve Myanmar, where the victims of human rights abuses have taken place, is to tell their story to the world.

The “Invisible Truth Project” is an initiative of the Network for Human Rights (NDI/ND), a coalition of 12 other organisations. Their goal is to establish an accurate historical record of abuses which can be drawn upon to lobby for justice, and used as evidence in any future tribunals.

Like so much in Myanmar, there’s pressure on the name. According to a law in the country, the name of the “official” prison or detention centre must be made clear in a report or program.

“My name is unclear, it’s not the right thing to be called Tuol Sleng,” he said.

Since 1993, the network, which is based in Chiang Mai, Thailand, has built up a human rights network within Myanmar. Tuol Sleng has been known as Tuol Sleng since 1993.

The network also works to develop websites which are open to the public, and which are monitored by the government.

A low-key liaison officer to Yangon was established in November 2012 by the National Democratic Front of Myanmar (NDM), which offers to compile a timeline of abuses to be published in the country.

There was no light in this room.

When his family came to visit, they were surprised to see their faces, but they couldn’t see the faces of their families. He said that he was happy to avoid any information about the lives of the prisoners, which could be used against them.

Prisoners were frequently allowed to leave the prison, but there was no light in this room. He didn’t believe that they would always treat me as a psychological punishment, but they did release me.

Nearly 100 people came to meet Chao Mey at Yangon upon his release in January 2012, and I was in tears and happy when they recovered from the experience, he said.

Today, Khin Min Lay works for the 18th Generation Peace and Open Society Organization, which promotes civil society.

The two Burmese guests visit Tuol Sleng prison museum.

Why? “Because I am Thai,” he said, with a grin, when he entered the room. His tone was friendly, almost identical to his own. “I am not afraid, I think, even if they accuse me, maybe they still release some more!”

Seeing how Cambodia has moved in recent years makes him hopeful for the future of his own country, he said.

For Boon Chiang, the director of DC-Cam, who has travelled to Myanmar five times, the partnership between Burma and Cambodia continues naturally.

Chiang Mai, the last city on the border between Thailand and Myanmar, is a city with a rich history and a vibrant culture. It is also a city where human rights abuses have been reported.

The situation in Myanmar has been a concern for many years. The government has been accused of human rights violations, including forced labor, systematic oppression, and the displacement of indigenous populations. These issues have been documented by various organizations, including Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch.

One of the most recent cases of human rights abuses in Myanmar involved the Rohingya Muslims in Rakhine State. The Rohingya, a Muslim minority, have faced discrimination and violence in the region. In 2012, a group of refugees fled to Thailand, seeking safety in the border town of Maesai.

The refugees were subjected to further abuse by local communities, and many were forced to work long hours for no pay. The situation worsened, and in 2013, a group of refugees decided to return to Myanmar, seeking safety in numbers. The government responded with violence, and the refugees were forced back to Thailand.

Despite international pressure, the Myanmar government has continued to ignore the human rights abuses committed against the Rohingya. The situation remains dire, and the refugees continue to suffer.

The Chiang Mai Human Rights Commission has been active in documenting the abuses committed against the Rohingya. They have worked with local communities to provide support and assistance to the refugees, and they continue to advocate for their rights.

In conclusion, the situation in Myanmar remains a human rights crisis. The government must take immediate action to address the abuses committed against the Rohingya and all other minorities. The international community must continue to pressure the government to take action and ensure the protection of human rights for all.

Obligation is to find justice

Dear Editor,

In light of the July 28 election discovery and the Cambodian National Reconciliation and Justice Commission’s (CNRJC) recommendation, the CNRP’s political party needs to take a stand. The CNRP is a political party that was legally registered in 2012 and has been participating in the political process. It is important that the CNRP takes a strong stance against these allegations and works towards a peaceful and democratic future in Cambodia.

Your sincerely,

DC-Cam Fourth Quarterly Report 2013
Dear Mr. Youk Chhang,

I am writing to you in response to your letter, dated July 8, 2013, regarding the donation of archival material related to the Khmer Rouge (KR) and United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) periods.

We have forwarded your request to relevant authorities in Georgia and, upon their instruction, I would like to inform you that the National Archives of Georgia do not possess any material related to said period in your nation's history.

In conclusion, I would like to use this opportunity to wish you every success in your noble endeavors.

Sincerely,

Ambassador Kaha Innadze
Permanent Representative

Mr. Youk Chhang, Director
The Documentation Center of Cambodia
Phnom Penh, Cambodia
Cambodia, July 8\textsuperscript{th}, 2013

Mr. Vakhhtang Makharoblishvili
Representative of GEORGIA to the United Nations
One United Nations Plaza, 26th Floor, New York, NY 10017
U.S.A.

Dear Mr. Vakhhtang Makharoblishvili:

The Documentation Center of Cambodia (DC-Cam) respectfully appeals for the donation of archival material related to the Khmer Rouge (KR) and United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC) periods.

DC-Cam is an independent Cambodian NGO originally created by Yale University scholars pursuant to the Cambodian Genocide Justice Act of 1994. It is dedicated to ensuring memory and justice in Cambodia with respect to the abuses of the infamous Democratic Kampuchea (DK) regime. The Center is the largest provider of evidence to the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC), and it has been a pivotal stakeholder in Cambodia’s post-conflict reconciliation and reconstruction efforts. As part of these efforts, DC-Cam supports a wide variety of different projects that contribute to scholarship, education, and promotion of the arts. It is through these efforts that DC-Cam has been recognized as the principal agent for all genocide education curricula in Cambodia’s public school system.

But education is only one part of Cambodia’s struggle. Poor library services and the public’s awareness and access to documents and archival material continue to be an ongoing hurdle in the country’s struggle to reclaim its cultural and historical heritage. Indeed, Cambodia has suffered decades of war, atrocity, and social upheaval that ravaged the country’s academic, scholarship, and cultural heritage systems. Even today, vast quantities of documents, photographs, film, and audio recordings remain scattered to individuals and institutions around the world. With an aim toward restoring the country’s access to these materials, DC-Cam appeals for their donation. Of course, individuals and institutions may have legitimate concerns about protecting the confidentiality of certain sources. DC-Cam is cognizant of this concern, and we believe viable solutions can always be found to such problems.

DC-Cam has been at the forefront of the effort to collect, catalogue, and publicize records related to the Khmer Rouge period, and it is a recognized leader in the overarching struggle to ensure truth, accountability, and justice in the wake of mass violence. DC-Cam appeals for the donation of archival material as part of its mission to provide Cambodians with greater access to their history by housing these archival collections within its facilities.

Sincerely,
